Fuel price shocker coming

Tories eye $1.30 a gallon gas price

Times News Services

TORONTO — The federal government is planning to increase gasoline and home heating oil prices by up to 30 cents a gallon within a year, apparently to shock Canadians into conservation.

The jump would be over and above the proposed five or six annual $4-per-barrel increases in the wellhead price of domestic oil.

Although reports differ on how the federal government plans to deal with energy pricing, all agree Ottawa is proposing massive increases.

Jeff Carruthers of FP Publications Ltd. says in an Ottawa report that the government proposed a leap of 30 cents a gallon in the federal excise tax on gasoline as part of an energy-pricing package rejected by Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed.

The CBC National television news says gasoline prices will increase by 24 cents a gallon by September. This would be achieved by increasing the excise tax by 10 cents in November followed by two increases in the well-head price of oil — 3½ cents in March and 10½ cents in September.

Government spokesmen would not comment today on the latest series of reports.

Prime Minister Joe Clark brushed past reporters on his way to the regular Progressive Conservative caucus meeting without responding to queries about higher prices for petroleum products.

Energy Minister Ray Hnatyshyn, who has said repeatedly he will not comment on proposals put forward by Ottawa until a new pricing agreement is in place, was with advisers and did not attend the meeting.

Finance Minister John Crosbie, asked whether he thought possible gasoline prices in the range of $1.30 a gallon were expensive replied: "It's much more expensive in other countries."

Hnatyshyn said in the Commons on Tuesday that no decision had been reached, but the government was working toward early agreement with the provinces.

In Edmonton, Premier Peter Lougheed said today it would not be in the public interest for him to comment on published reports that Alberta had rejected federal proposals to substantially increase excise taxes on gasoline and new ways to share oil revenues.

"We're in the process of negotiations and we don't think it's in the public interest of Alberta to comment on it," he told reporters before going to a cabinet meeting.

Provincial Treasurer Lou Hyndman called the reports "speculation in the extreme."

Carruthers' report says the proposed rise in the excise tax to 37 cents from the current seven cents, designed to shock Canadians into conservation, would have pushed up gasoline

OLIVIA: Granny let her go out with near-stranger

Girl, 4, molested killed on street

VANCOUVER (CP) — Dark-haired Olivia Olson screamed and stamped her foot on the floor to get permission from her grandmother to accompany a 32-year-old man on a middle-of-the-night excursion to the corner store.

The grandmother was reluctant to let the four-year-old native Indian girl go as it was 4 a.m. and she didn't know the man very well.

But the man, who'd been watching television with them, wanted cigarettes and Olivia was creating a fuss, so Blanche Olson, the 44-year-old grandmother, let her go.

Olivia never made it to the store. The trip ended in tragedy Tuesday when police discovered the girl's partially-clad body in a vacant lot 10 city blocks from her home. An autopsy showed she died of suffocation and had been sexually molested.

A Canada-wide warrant has been issued for the suspect, identified by Mrs. Olson as Louis Therriault.

Mrs. Olson said Therriault, a recent acquaintance, decided he wanted some cigarettes and Olivia volunteered to go get them.

"He gave her some money and she said 'I'll go to the store,' but I didn't want that," said Mrs. Olson.

"She started crying and kicking and screaming that she wanted to go to the store. So he said he'd take her and said 'she'll be all right with me,' but I didn't know him that well.

"I was worried about her after she had been gone over an hour. So I waited another hour, then I called the police around 6 a.m."

Mrs. Olson said she notified the girl's 21-year-old mother, Eileen Olson, in Winnipeg after police discovered the body. Olivia and the grandmother, also from Winnipeg, moved to Vancouver about three years ago.

'OPEC has lost control'

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — Saudi Arabia's oil minister says the oil cartel has lost control and it is up to consumers to stop price boosts "before it is too late."

In a speech to a group of geologists here Tuesday, Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani called for a slowdown in consumption and curbs on buying on the spot market, where prices are far above those set by Saudi Arabia and other cartel members.

"We do not like to see it happening like this," Yamani said as he urged stringent rationing of petroleum products in oil-consuming nations.

Saudi Arabia will not continue to moderate its prices if the international oil companies keep skimming off huge profits, the sheik added.

A similar warning was sounded in Tokyo today by the chairman of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC).

Stating that OPEC will definitely have to raise its prices at its next meeting in December in Venezuela, Nana Said Al Otaiba — oil minister of the United Arab Emirates — warned that world oil supplies did not necessarily meet demands.

"Consuming nations have to try to save oil to prevent the arrival of global tragedy," he said.

In related developments:

— The U.S. Senate Tuesday approved $20 billion to achieve volume production in 10 years of synthetic squeezed from coal, shale and other materials, in hopes of lessening U.S. dependence on foreign oil.

— And Americans took to the streets today to demonstrate for lower energy prices.

Oil is selling on the Rotterdam spot market for $40 a barrel or more.

By contrast, OPEC's official ceiling price is $23.50 a barrel. And Saudi Arabia sells its oil at $18 a barrel, the lowest price charged by any of the cartel members.

Yamani said OPEC's loss of control "is due to the high consumption and loss of control on the Rotterdam market."

"The consumers are responsible for this," he said.

Earlier this month, after appeals from President

$30M from BCRIC

By PAUL NICHOLSON

Banks and financial institutions which handled the distribution of shares in the B.C. Resources Investment Corp. earned more than $30 million for their efforts.

Total cost of the scheme exceeded $36.5 million.

The institutions handled about two million applications for the five free share giveaway at $5 per application, for a total of $10 million, and they earned 25 cents each for additional shares that were sold.

More than 80 million additional shares were sold before the June 15 deadline, earning the financial institutions a further $20 million.

The province budgeted $15 million for the giveaway portion of the shares distribution.

The extra $5 million went to advertising and promotion of the scheme and for printing the application forms.

BCRIC paid the banks $20 million for the sale of the other shares, and spent a further $1.5 million for printing share certificates and the prospectus and for legal fees.

Total cost for the distribution — both the giveaway and sales — is more than $36.5 million.

As far as BCRIC is concerned, it was a good deal for its shareholders.

President David Helliwell said in an interview the company paid out $21.5 million ($20 million in fees to the financial institutions and $1.5 for other costs) to generate almost $500 million revenues from the stock sale.

Helliwell, who owns 6,005 shares now worth $45,000, said in financial circles the rule of thumb is to spend six per cent of what is returned in a stock sale.

BCRIC got a tremendous deal in generating sales of $478 million for only $21.5 million, he said.

'Saint of the gutters' wins Nobel for peace

OSLO (AP) — Mother Teresa, Calcutta's "saint of the gutters," was awarded the 1979 Nobel Peace Prize today for her work among the poor of India.

The Yugoslavia-born Roman Catholic nun is the sixth woman to win the prize and the first since Mairead Corrigan and Betty Williams of Northern Ireland won in 1976.

President Carter had been among the 56 individuals and organizations nominated for this year's prize. Other nominees were reported to have included South African black leader Steven Biko, who died while in prison; Soviet dissenter Yuri Orlov; Archbishop Oscar Romero of El Salvador and Adolfo Perez Esquivel of Argentina, head of a Latin American Christian services group.

MOTHER TERESA
. . . helping poor

The five-member Norwegian Nobel Committee said Mother Teresa was given the prize "in recognition of her work in bringing help to suffering humanity".

The prize this year is worth $190,000.

In 1947, Mother Teresa moved into Calcutta's slums "to serve God among the poorest of the poor." The order she founded, the Missionaries of Charity, is best known for its "home for the destitute dying" which opened in Calcutta in 1952.

Mother Teresa, 69, was made an officer in the Order of the British Empire in a ceremony last year at the Australian High Commission in New Delhi for her "services to humanity".

And now homing donkeys

NAIROBI (Reuter) — Homing donkeys, trained to travel unaccompanied by men, are being used to smuggle goods from Kenya into neighboring Ethiopia and Kenyan customs officials say they cannot stop them.

The official Kenya News Agency said the donkeys crossed into Kenya from Ethiopia alone using small tracks not normally patrolled by customs officials.

"The donkeys, which seem to know their destination, cross the border and stop outside a house where an agent loads them with various commodities, including beer and soft drinks." the agency said.

"As a result, many shops on the Kenyan side remain short while shops in Moyale (Ethiopia) are fully stocked."

Red-faced Bennett vows party cleanup

An embarrassed Premier Bill Bennett shouldered much of the blame Tuesday for the dirty tricks-lettergate affair and promised action to ensure it doesn't occur again.

And he suggested other parties, particularly the NDP, could look within their own operations to ensure high moral conduct is universal — notably at election time.

Bennett says that, although it distresses him to have to do so, he will bring forward a resolution at the November Socred convention for establishment of an ethics committee to lay down guidelines to ensure a similar affair is never repeated.

Other parties federally and provincially — especially the NDP could well consider similar actions, he said.

He said the NDP still has failed to answer some questions about dirty campaigning during the last election, such as NDP members' signing nomination papers for Tory candidates and tearing down Socred election signs.

NDP leader Dave Barrett, however, said today since some of the lettergate allegations touch on what might be criminal acts, an investigation should be launched by the attorney-general's ministry.

Bennett said part of the culpability lies with the youthful exhuberance of a young and growing Social Credit party.

"We don't have a lot of experience and we don't have a set political machine that is traditional with a longer (established) more organized parties," he said.

For more than an hour Bennett dealt with the lettergate affair, how it was allowed to happen and why it took so long for any action to be taken.

Bennett said he feels he got to the bottom of most of it but he was unable to shed any more light on the mysterious Ron Greig resignation.

Greig, a former assistant to Bennett's communications advisor, was tied in with a forged letter sent to the Victoria newspapers over the name of a prominent NDP supporter in an apparent effort to discredit him.

Greig resigned for "personal reasons" after he was named in the press. Greig has remained silent.

Bennett said he got the same reaction when he talked with Greig Tuesday. He refused to tell the premier whether or not he had written the letter, repeating that he had resigned for personal reasons.

Chief caucus researcher Jack Kelly resigned last week. His voice was on campaign tapes telling consituency level workers that if they needed help with writing letters to newspapers, the researchers could help.

The researchers, Kelly said, know how to "play dirty."

Bennett faced a barrage of questions.

Reporters wanted to know if the higher-ups responsible for ordering 175 copies of the tapes and distributing them

Seven years in wrong court

VANCOUVER (CP) — The federal government conceded Tuesday it spent seven years in the wrong court in an attempt to gain possession of a Richmond couple's home which sits in an area slated for expansion of the Vancouver International Airport.

The government had gone to the Supreme Court of Canada in an effort to get George and Evelyn Jackson to vacate their home.

But lawyer George Hynna said the government now concedes that the Federal Court trial division which granted a possession order and the Federal Court of Appeal which upheld the decision did not have jurisdiction.

The case should have proceeded in the British Columbia Supreme Court, he said.

Charles Johnstone, the Jackson's lawyer, said the decision "opens the door to a whole new set of proceedings that could take another four or five years."

"Now the question is if there is any kind of sanity in the government and if they will sit down and negotiate."

He said he would contact government authorities as soon as possible to try and work out a settlement.

The case began in 1972 when after years of on-again off-again threats of takeover the Jacksons, along with about 50 neighbors, were served with expropriation notices.

The Jacksons and several others decided to settle and signed sales agreements, while others waited for expropriation. Less than four months later, the Jacksons learned that their neighbors whose land was expropriated were paid 37 per cent more for their properties.

The Jacksons are seeking between $23,000 and $36,000 — the difference they claim they would have got under expropriation.

They have refused to leave their home which sits in a wasteland of vacant, idle land created by government bullodozers that levelled neighboring houses.

THE OUTCASTS by Ben Wicks

Bennett vows Socred cleanup to campaign organizations throughout the province were't as guilty as Kelly.

Surely if his remarks were not edited out, then senior members of the party at least tacitly agreed with Kelly's statements, it was suggested.

But Bennett said if anyone else were guilty of anything, it was oversight.

Apparently as the election material was being compiled, no one with any authority bothered to listen to the tapes, he said.

Other than repeating that the party obviously needs to improve its internal communications, he could provide no answers as to why not a single Socred had listened to the campaign tapes and protested against the dirty trick remarks.

Bennett was reminded that Glen Mitchell, who was chief researcher last year and, therefore, Kelly's immediate boss, had listened to Kelly's presentation.

Mitchell knew the seminar was being taped and was on the committee that authorized the additional copies and looked after distributing them to the constituencies.

Mitchell has since left the caucus to become executive assistant to Education Minister Pat McGeer.

Bennett said he told Mitchell he felt Kelly should have been disciplined when he made the statements, and the remarks removed from the recordings.

But Bennett defended Mitchell, saying he knows from his work in the caucus that he is a competent worker.

"We all make mistakes — even the press. This just happened to be a highly visible one," he said, indicating no further action is being contemplated against Mitchell.

Bennett said he is not on a witch-hunt aiming to fire all those involved.

Still to be dealt with is the third caucus researcher Ellen Mackay, who is vacationing in England and presumably unaware of the tempest in Victoria.

Her voice, too, is on the tapes advocating certain ways the party can play dirty.

Bennett said, as she is still with the caucus, any discipline against her is up to caucus chairman Jack Kempf, the MLA from Omineca.

Kempf said earlier he will deal with her when she returns from vacation this week.

Bennett also said that if he had been in Victoria instead of on a two-week trade mission to Japan and Korea, the whole affair would have been dealt with firmly and quickly before being blown out of proportion.

Bennett was asked if he lacks confidence in his colleagues over their inability to deal with the affair while he was away.

The premier replied that he had delegated authority for all normal governmental affairs but the lettergate problem was unanticipated and that he has the fullest confidence in his colleagues.

$260,000 judgment made in art smuggling frame-up

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Vancouver man who says he was framed by a United States secret service man, U.S. customs agents and the RCMP in a plot to smuggle paintings has won a court judgment worth $260,000.

The judgment in a civil suit launched by Sam Angel in Seattle followed a clandestine plot by the law-enforcement agencies to trap Angel, who was suspected of smuggling art works into the U.S., court documents show.

The U.S. government has been ordered by the U.S. federal district court to pay $260,000 for two paintings and Eskimo art works purchased from Angel by U.S. undercover agents in 1976.

Angel won the judgment against Seattle First National Bank which was caught in the middle of the plot and the bank recovered the award in a suit against the U.S. government.

ANGEL
. . . secret agent target

A U.S. treasury department document says the art purchase was made by the U.S. Customs Service as part of a plan set up by a U.S. secret agent known as S-148 SF. The agent was working in Canada with the RCMP, which provided electronic surveillance and support in the operation, the document says.

Five Canadians, including Angel, were charged in the U.S. with smuggling and conspiracy to smuggle art works worth $260,000.

In his affidavit, Angel says he was approached by Don Tayler, 68, and James Partridge, 59, both of North Vancouver and was told Tayler had a U.S. buyer who was looking for art works, jewelry and gold.

Angel and his wife Sadie had assembled a private art collection. When they learned she was dying of cancer, they decided to sell some of the collection. She died in 1977.

Tayler's buyer called himself Mark Hartman but was really secret agent S-148 SF. In the civil trial, U.S. authorities refused to produce the agent for questioning.

Hartman viewed the collection at Angel's home and agreed to buy a Joseph Buche painting for $200,000. He also agreed to purchase a J.C. Ibetsen work for $10,000 and a 72-piece Eskimo art collection.

There is no duty on original art works imported into the U.S. but failure to declare them constitutes smuggling.

The oil paintings were properly purchased from reputable Vancouver art dealers, Angel said.

Angel said he refused to take the paintings across the border to make a deal for cash and insisted the money be deposited in a bank.

Angel said in an interview he expected there would be Canadian capital gains tax to pay and his decision that the transaction go through a bank clearly indicated his intention to pay it.

Retarded deprived of food

SURREY (CP) — Retarded children integrated into an elementary school here sometimes are deprived of lunches and snacks as a form of punishment, school officials said Tuesday.

But the practice is part of a behavior modification program, they added.

Officials explained the practice after the older sister of one of the students, tears streaming down her face, asked Surrey school board members Monday night to explain the practice.

The woman said her 15-year-old sister, described by school officials as severely retarded, had her lunch withheld for two days in a row because she didn't complete tasks assigned to her.

Teacher Bev Mason explained the practice at a school board news conference Tuesday and, in a later interview, school superintendent Jack Evans said it is not true that the 11 retarded children in two classes are being starved or subjected to cruel and unusual punishment.

The majority of the students, aged from nine to 20, are severely retarded and only two of them can speak intelligibly, said Evans. Since food is something they can relate to, withholding it in some circumstances is part of a proven method of behavior modification, he said.

Evans said a note is sent home to the parents when the student has been deprived of lunch. In addition, there is a training program to help parents understand the system but not many parents attend, he said.

Widow fights to keep home

BURNABY (UPC) — Lillian Mann is determined to keep her home of the last 25 years despite the wishes of the city council to expropriate it for a recreation and library complex.

The 56-year-old widow, who plans to meet with her lawyer today to plot strategy for the next council meeting Oct. 22, won a reprieve this week from a council demand that she vacate her home by Oct. 15.

The council decided to let Mrs. Mann stay until municipal staff could prepare a report on her request for a full investigation into the need for her property. The report is due Oct. 22, she said.

Publicity about her plight which began in April 1978 when she turned down a $87,000 offer for her two-storey house on a half-acre of land has drawn the support of neighbors and activist groups.

In May she received another offer, this time for $102,000, which she again refused, saying the offer came to $4.67 per square foot, but replacement costs for her land would be $10 per square foot and another $45 per square foot for her home.

Second Narrows opened

VANCOUVER (UPC) — Canadian National Railway engineers said Tuesday the Second Narrows channel in Burrard Inlet was safe for freighter traffic four days after a major rail bridge was smashed by a Japanese vessel.

As harbor authorities opened the channel, CNR put the finishing touches on alternative schedules for the unloading of the nearly 1,500 cars daily which crossed the only rail link between Vancouver and North Vancouver's loading docks.

But with the severing of the rail bridge by the Japan Erica last Friday, a number of grain workers face layoffs until the bridge is rebuilt.

Vancouver Harbormaster Capt. Harry Vondette said Tuesday freighters will be allowed to navigate the channel under "very stringent regulations" between sunrise and sunset during the estimated 3½ months it will take to repair the bridge.

CNR spokesman Al Menard said most alternative arrangements for movement of grain and other shipments for the next 15 weeks were complete. Some shipments will be diverted to Prince George, then into North Vancouver on the British Columbia Railway line. Others will go to Prince Rupert, Port Moody and Roberts Bank.

A fait accompli

The recommendation by U.S. Secretary of the Interior Cecil Andrus that the Northern Tier pipeline route is the best way for the U.S. to transport Alaskan oil to the southern 48 states should come as absolutely no surprise to anyone.

Nor should Foothills Oil Pipeline's decision to pull its proposal for an all-land route for the oil out of the bidding. When your chief competitor is within yards of the finish line while you still have several laps to run, there's really not much point in spending thousands of dollars to finish the race.

For the past several months, it has become increasingly clear that the Northern Tier proposal was by far the most likely to win the support of U.S. President Carter. First, it had the advantage that it would be entirely American-controlled. Though that seems an almost irrelevant factor now, it could be important in the distant future if real battling over oil resources begins — a development that is predicted by some futurologists.

Second, Northern Tier has done a great deal of work in preparation for its proposal. It has numerous studies, reports and investigations dealing with the economic, environmental and social effects of its entire plan. It has spent much time working with the various governments that would be involved, enlisting their support and promising much co-operation. The other companies have done no little amount of work also, but the impression conveyed is that they remain far behind Northern Tier in pulling their entire proposals together.

The Northern Tier proposal (an oil port at Port Angeles, then an entirely new pipeline across to the midwestern U.S.) is not, by any stretch of the imagination, the best of the options for Canada. It will result in a high hazard of oil spills along the B.C. coast and in the Strait of Juan de Fuca. Yet all the construction will be in the U.S., so Canada will not receive any economic payoff that way.

The Foothills proposal would have been much better for Canada: it would have eliminated the threat of tanker traffic, and it would have provided thousands of jobs. Both the B.C. and Canadian government did endorse the Foothills proposal, albeit rather tentatively and perhaps too late to influence the U.S. decision.

Even the Trans-Mountain Pipeline route, another option proposed, would have offered Canada the benefit of jobs and economic development though it too would have brought increased environmental risk from tanker traffic.

Yet for Canadian officials to begin now to press their U.S. counterparts hard for one of these alternatives is probably for them to waste their time. The chances of Carter reversing Andrus's recommendation appear small indeed.

It would be better perhaps for the B.C. and federal governments to begin now to work with the U.S. to formulate policies that will minimize the risk of environmental damage from the port to be built as part of the Northern Tier proposal.

To begin with, it might be possible to convince Northern Tier to locate its port at Low Point, about 20 miles west of Port Angeles, rather than at Port Angeles itself. This is a suitable site for a port (it's where Trans-Mountain is planning its port, were it to receive the go-ahead), and its use would mean that tankers would have a smaller distance to travel in the straits, thus reducing, at least a little, the risk of oil spills.

Canada should also strongly encourage the U.S. government to require that all oil companies with refineries or terminals in Washington state use the Northern Tier port, at whichever site it is finally built. Such a requirement would mean that the oil bound for refineries at Cherry Point, now carried by tanker through tricky inland waterways, would also be unloaded at the new deep-sea port. The risk of spills there is significantly less than in the narrower, more treacherous waters further inland.

Another step would be the establishment of a first-rate navigational system along the west coast and through the Juan de Fuca Strait to the port. It might be found advantageous to develop a traffic control or radar system, almost like that applied to airplanes today.

Many other safety steps are also possible: more stringent standards on tanker construction, better training of crews, even a computer data bank of tanker information to ensure that tankers not meeting safety standards are weeded out quickly.

These steps will not eliminate the risk of oil spills at Port Angeles. Nothing will do that. But they will probably be more productive than tardy Canadian speeches about how much better some other oil route would have been.

Gloom settles on Liberals

WINNIPEG — Sometime during the Christmas holidays, most probably as he stares up at the sun from a strip of southern sand, Pierre Elliot Trudeau will make up his mind whether to switch to private life or to fight to remain as Liberal Leader.

He won't, say those closest to Trudeau, announce his decision at that time, although as one puts it, "His choice won't be that hard to guess if he suddenly develops a passion for meeting Liberals in places like Moose Jaw and Lethbridge."

Guesses aside, say insiders, Trudeau himself will end the suspense, either just after the Quebec referendum next spring, or just before the party's leadership review convention which, despite a precautionary block-booking of convention space in Winnipeg for next March, isn't likely to be held until next summer or fall.

Without pushing

All kinds of buts and if and ors remain. Trudeau could decide to go, but then might decide to remain, if Prime Minister Joe Clark stumbles badly, or if Rene Levesque wins a "hard-question" referendum. Assume that the universe continues to unfold as it now is doing, though, and the safest guess is, as a source puts it, "He'll go, provided he isn't pushed."

At an unofficial policy conference in Winnipeg last weekend, ten dozen top Liberals managed, despite the best investigative efforts of three dozen lip-reading, ear-flapping reporters, not to push Trudeau.

"Leadership? Leadership?" remarked Ed Roberts, an authority on the subject as one of three deposed leaders in Newfoundland. "It's like a burp in church, everyone knows its happened; no-one wants to talk about it."

Instead, the Liberals told Trudeau why he had to go.

As in, by Bill Belliveau, a magazine publisher from Halifax: "Since 1972, we've been preoccupied with staying in power without knowing why we wanted it. Now we are intellectually bankrupt, without any idea of where we want to go."

As in, by Izzy Asper, a Winnipeg lawyer and a former Manitoba leader: "We haven't yet faced the enormity of what has happened. You've no idea of the degree of hatred. Throughout the West, Liberal has become a dirty word."

As in, by Hu Harries, an Edmonton economist and once, as an Alberta Liberal MP, a member of Canada's smallest ethnic minority,: "We're kidding ourselves if we think all we need to do is to clean up our act a little so we can go back to our normal occupation of government. The truth is, we may well have an Alberta Prime Minister for the next 25 years."

The unsayable never was said, therefore, because there was no need to say it. Self-evidently, a party that may be out of power for a quarter of a century because it has become intellectually bankrupt and an object of hatred in half the country, needs a new leader.

As evidently, even a new leader may not be enough.

This was the fascination to the affair. To ensure that no one at the conference descended from flights of policy fancy ("Instead of a strong central government we should be advocating a strong national government"), to the earthy practicalities of leadership, Trudeau loyalists leavened it, at the last-minute, with several dozen of their own MPs and ex-ministers.

The tactic worked, except the mood of pessimism, about After Trudeau—What?, rather than about After Trudeau—Who?, infected the loyalists as much as the dissidents.

"We're not the government, and its perfectly clear that we may not be the government for quite a while," said Toronto MP Peter Stollery. "We're having a hell of a time in Parliament. We have no intellectual capital left," said Northern Ontario MP and ex-cabinet minister, John Ried.

Few suggestions

Few could suggest what Liberals now should do. In workshops, delegates did debate, but then divided West against East, taking a stronger stand against foreign ownership. Ontario Liberal Leader Stuart Smith drew applause when he proposed that Liberals become "the new center" as the defender of the interests of all society against those of special-interest groups — from unions to corporation lobbies — now demanding to get what they want out of society at any cost to it.

In private, delegates were more gloomy. Said one: "We're going into the '80s with the Conservatives occupying all the ground — open government, freedom of information, Parliamentary reform — that ought to have been ours." Said another: "To talk about new policies without talking about new leadership is the political equivalent of kissing your sister."

A decade ago, Pierre Trudeau came out of nowhere to become Liberal leader. At Winnipeg, without ever talking about him, Liberals asked themselves whether Trudeau may not have led them nowhere. He'd have been better off if they'd merely told him what to do during his Christmas holiday.

Dismantling the PQ bomb

MONTREAL — The Conservative government is handling Quebec the way a munitions expert dismantles a bomb: with extreme caution.

When Joe Clark was elected prime minister last May, observers predicted Quebec would be a potentially explosive problem for his predominantly English-speaking, western-based government.

But five months later, Clark's careful low profile strategy toward Rene Levesque's PQ government has defused the situation. And some of the prime minister's recent moves in Quebec have been widely applauded here.

The recent nomination of Arthur Tremblay to the Senate was a stroke of political genius, even though it ruffled the feathers of a few Tory loyalists in Quebec.

Improve credibility

Tremblay, a long-time senior civil servant in the Quebec government, was one of the architects of Quebec's Quiet Revolution in the 1960s. He will give a big boost to the Tory government's credibility on constitutional matters.

Before retiring in 1977, Tremblay was deputy intergovernmental affairs minister to Claude Morin, the man designing the PQ's referendum strategy. Now, as a Tory Senator, he will be able to provide Clark with first hand advice on how to deal with the PQ.

"He'll provide an input the Tories couldn't get from anyone else," says one Conservative insider. "He lets them penetrate a part of Quebec they never had access to."

Some Tory loyalists were extremely upset at the nomination because Tremblay has never been a Conservative. They would have preferred the seat had gone to a Tory bagman who could raise money for the party in the province.

"There was an incredible amount of flak in the party over the nomination," says one of Clark's Quebec advisers. "But everyone fell into line when it was clear this was the man the prime minister wanted." Clark winds up a political winner over the nomination because it shows he is serious about listening to the concerns of Quebecers.

Quebec Tories point to a string of recent decisions by the federal government that have won them respect in Quebec. First, there was the quick decision to implement bilingualism in Quebec air space after a commission of inquiry ruled it could be done safely.

An emotional sticking point with Quebecers for years, the bilingual air traffic control issue provided the Conservatives with their first chance to show good faith toward Quebec.

The federal decision to turn over responsibility for offshore mineral rights and lotteries to the province is also of importance to Quebecers, says PC vice-president Michel Cogger. "Although this government has been in power only four months, we have yet to see a head-on collision with the PQ."

Clark changed the federal government's battle plan toward Quebec as soon as he took office. Unlike Liberal cabinet ministers who attacked every move the PQ made in Quebec, Tory ministers were told to seek cooperation with Quebec. And in many cases Quebec and Ottawa cabinet ministers have already established solid working relationships.

ARTHUR TREMBLAY

Clark has scrapped Liberal plans to hold a federal referendum on Quebec's constitutional future, charging that the Liberal tactic was "a threat" to Quebecers.

He has also dismantled the Liberals' special national unity task force, transferring the civil servant in charge, Paul Tellier, to the department of Indian Affairs. The Tellier group coordinated the Trudeau government's counterattacks against the PQ.

Clark's efforts to breed a climate of cooperation rather than confrontation with Quebec have forced the Parti Quebecois to readjust its own thinking. When the Liberals were in power, they were a predictable commodity for the PQ. And the guerilla warfare between Liberal MPs and Pequiste MNAs resembled a family feud.

But now, by shying away from confrontation tactics, the Conservatives have deprived the Levesque government of the well-defined Liberal target it enjoyed for the past three years.

The Conservatives' low profile strategy has kept relations civil between Quebec and Ottawa, but it has not helped the party's electoral chances in the province. And to some disgruntled Quebec Tories, the party's "invisible" act in Quebec is political suicide.

"I have serious reservations about the strategy," says one prominent Montreal Tory. "The party is losing a big opportunity by not being more active."

At a recent meeting of national unity groups here, there were elected representatives from the federal and provincial Liberals, the Union Nationale but not a single Conservative MP in attendance.

Looking bad

"If the referendum is defeated and we haven't done anything about it, we're going to look awfully bad," the Tory source said.

But Clark seems content to let the provincial Liberal leader Claude Ryan carry the ball during the referendum campaign.

Meanwhile, the Tories are relying on political patronage and possible defections (like the recent switch by MP Richard Janelle from the Socreds to the PCs) to build support in Quebec.

Conservative sources admit they have abandoned the idea of naming Quebecers to the cabinet via Senate appointments, after several prominent Quebecers turned down such offers. "Not many French Quebecers would have been prepared to accept Senate appointments in the cabinet," says one local Tory. "The government would have got a lot of flak and ridicule over it."

Quebec Conservatives agree the key to their political fortunes here is the formation of a provincial Conservative party. But such a project will have to wait until after the Quebec referendum on independence, so as not to further divide the federalist forces.

Prefers old chairs

On Oct. 10, Times column "Town Talk" expressed concern about the decor and entertainment on B.C. ferries. The older high back chairs are as comfortable as any public transportation seating; heavily subsidized airlines place more attractive looking seats in their plans, they are certainly no more comfortable. Newspapers and magazines should be entertainment enough for a hour and a half trip. Are the patrons of our ferry system really in need of more coddling?

The increased cost of any refurbishing would be reflected in higher ferry costs: The result - larger subsidies, increased fares. As a regular ferry user, I would prefer an older chair and a newspaper to higher costs. — L. L. Collard, Sooke.

Lack of nobility

With the wave of beneficence and purity having left the atmosphere with the departure of the Pope — we are treated to the spectacle of Social Credit manipulation. And it is my intention to point out that the implications of this "dirty tricks" episode go much deeper than anyone seems to realize.

The Social Credit party is a party of conservatism, a party of the right, bent upon the glories of free enterprise and good old fashioned values. However, in this controversy the real basis of their vision of politics is revealed. Far from trusting in the wisdom of the past, in the inherent support they must be receiving from the forces of good — or God — (conservatism after all means some belief in truths which do not change: liberalism is based on relativistic notions of existence) they have deemed it necessary to contrive a situation which will artificially ensure they stay in power. And this is the difference between the authentic conservative and the reactionary conservative: one perceives the beauty, the rectitude of tradition, (it reflects a transcendent order beyond change); the other perceives the threat of liberalism, fears that impulse of progression. In the latter case conservatism emerges out of a fear of change, and is not accompanied by any intuitive, aesthetic appreciation for the quality of life independent of ideology.

And this is the great disappointment of the Social Credit Party: they are by and large a group of individuals who do not replace the desire for improvement of the human condition (the end of socialism) with a dignified sense of a purpose or justice beyond and superior to that reformist tendency. Theirs is a conservatism by negation — they do not want the evils of socialism to deprive them — and us — of the liberties that can bring success and productivity; they do not evince a power or subtlety that would make them worthy of being the instruments of unchanging truth. They are satisfied that, given the opportunity, civilization already has the answers, and there need be no more discoveries or experiments in democracy: capitalism works, period.

So then, this is my indictment of the B.C. Social Credit Party: in devising a plot to damage the reputation of the NDP through fictitious letter writing, in attempting to influence the media through unnatural means — and in their 'stonewalling' in the aftermath, they have revealed the complete absence of nobility and honor that should accompany a party so determined to preserve ancient values and the dignified responsibilities of the individual. — Robin W. Carlsen, 1225 Sunnyside Avenue.

Balance approach

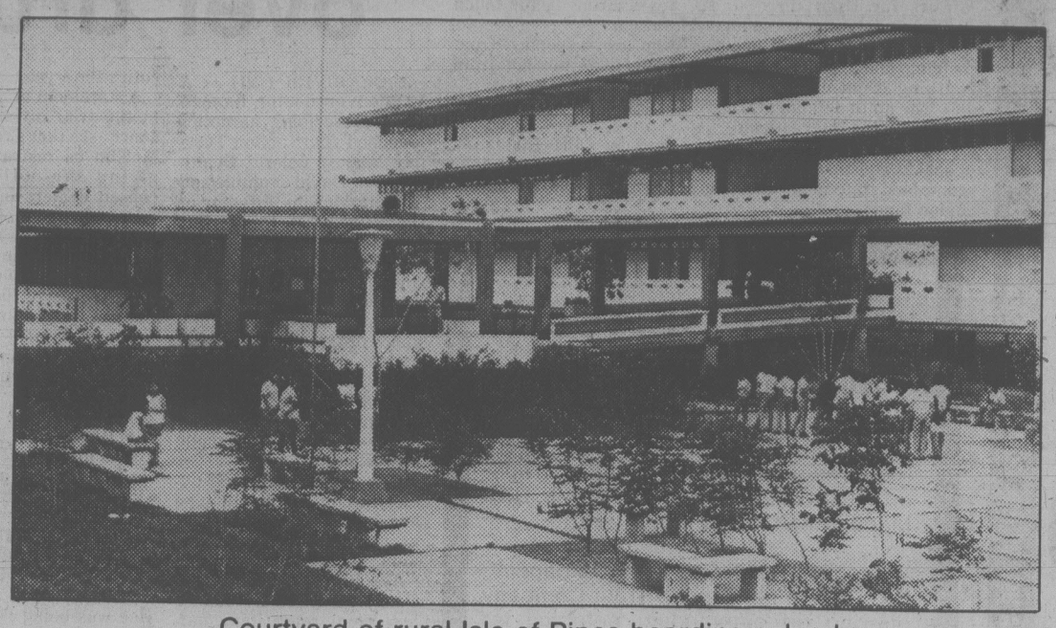
I have been following the debate about forestry in this column with much interest, and appreciate the informative viewpoints presented. The letter of Mr. Backman, President of the Association of B.C. Professional Foresters, dated September 30, was an eye opener. Not for what it said, but for what the letter failed to say.

Our belief is that the forests of British Columbia are meant to be managed by foresters to protect and to enhance the natural environment, as well as to provide a continuing supply of goods and services. To our dismay, Mr. Backman has put the total emphasis on one aspect alone — that of timber production — logging. It seems the definition of integrated management provided by this association is more timber inventories, more tree tending, more utilization of low quality wood, more timber growth on less land, and more money to do these things.

We recognize that it is proper for the association to put forth these concerns but where are the concerns for protecting and enhancing the natural forest environment and all the other goods and services which flow from the forest? We would expect foresters to actively protect and enhance the flow of wildlife, fish, water, clean air, recreation and wilderness from our quote "public ownership of forest land". If the only emphasis of foresters is to maximize timber, then most other forest values will cease to exist. There must be a balanced approach to forest management, and sacrificing non-timber values is not a balance. — Eva Howden, Secretary, Victoria Group, Sierra Club.

Two faces of Cuba:

By JOHN ERRILL
London Observer



Courtyard of rural Isle of Pines boarding school

Lots for the children . . .

HAVANA — I asked the waiter in the hotel for orange juice at breakfast on my first morning in Cuba, some 10 years ago. "Only for children," he said. One of the official slogans then was, "Children are the only privileged people," and only families with a child under eight could have any of the rationed supply of orange juice.

This year orange juice, though still rationed, is available to everyone, but there's still a slogan, "There is nothing more important than a child."

To arrive in Cuba from another Latin American country is to notice right away the difference in the condition of the children. No rickety little beggars materialize by your table and stare piteously at your food. Every child in the street looks adequately fed. There is none of that dull-eyed listlessness which signals mental deficiency due to bad diet and lack of stimulation, and which dooms tens of millions of kids to a short life and a wretched one.

In 20 years, since the Castro revolution, Cuba has brought up a generation in health and opportunity. No amount of critique and qualification can detract from this liberation of a previously beset majority of a nation from the withering fears which blight most of humanity.

Mothers are free of basic fears for the fate of their children: come what may, they will be fed and, if they fall ill, proper medical care will be available at no charge. There will be free education for them and, if they have the right talents and application, they will be able to attain any position in society. The infant mortality rate is lower than in many of the United States. All this has been brought to pass in an agricultural, tropical country of 10 million people, more than half of whom are aged under 16.

The body, then, is secure. The attitudes and distortions which stem from having to struggle most of one's time to stay alive are absent.

The best bodies are cherished. Children with special prowess are soon offered places in special schools, not on a Russian scale, but there is a creaming-off. As is likely where most families have little tradition of achievement in school, or even of literacy, hundreds of kids can only be singled out because of sporting skills. They go into a competitive environment in which the strongest and nimblest take the greatest awards.

The best minds are much sought after too. The Cuban child is introduced early to competition. He does not have much to do with it before he enters school at five (first grade), but he can find himself in a creche-cum-kindergarten at an early age.

The government is keen to get as many women out to work as possible, so there are facilities for day-care of kids from seven weeks to five years. The kindergartens are usually short of toys (any pair of roller-skates you see in Cuba is half on one kid and half on his friend), but are clean and sunny, and have plenty of staff to give the children attention.

Once in school, the child has to attain certain standards each year to move up to the next grade. First-graders, for instance, have to master longhand and the two-times table, among other things. In the third grade, seven-year-olds wrestle with a course in basic medicine. To hear a room full of little Cubans chant their way through details of how smoking ruins your health by attacking the respiratory apparatus (no easier to say in Spanish than in English) is enough to stop anyone reaching for the next cigarette.

Life is even tougher in secondary school (12-plus). The drive to make the national economy more efficient has top priority, which puts a premium on well-qualified administrators and technicians. Many of the children tackle the heavy work-load dutifully, taking shortages of textbooks, writing materials, laboratory equipment and teachers in their stride. They even make light of the compulsory 45 days in agricultural work camps each summer, although this is no picnic.

But many others do not. Among children aged 12 and more, the truancy and drop-out rate increases considerably. This is put down by the government to "pre-revolutionary attitudes" — a phrase meant to evoke and condemn the feeling that it is part of life if kids, as they begin to turn into adults, drift away from school into odd jobs, street gangs and chasing the opposite sex.

Only partly true. The Caribbean and Spanish-American disregard for years of work in school with a view to future rewards — due largely to exclusion from any chance to try it — is still strong in Cuba. But the intense competition in school, expressed through frequent tests and emphasis on percentages scored, discourages many pupils who discover that they are not high-flyers. The Cuban system soon tags those who are to be mere hewers of wood and drawers of water, cutters of cane and pourers of concrete.

In an effort to keep more children at school until they are 16, the government is building a string of 500-pupil schools in the countryside. During term-time, each child goes home only from Saturday mid-day until Sunday evening and spends part of each working day on cultivation (not especially arduous) of crops near the school. But construction of much-needed housing and factories takes priority and the countryside school program is slow to grow.

Apart from that, the population has increased by nearly three million in 20 years. Many of the older generation complain about children running wild, especially in Havana. (Although petty theft and vandalism are rising, Havana is still a world away from Rio de Janeiro, say, where thousands of desperate homeless urchins cling to a hand-to-mouth existence).

However, the fact that most schools operate a shift system — half the pupils in the morning and half in the afternoon — leaves a lot of children at a long loose end, neglectful of their homework (often because their homes are crowded) and lacking diversions.

"We're a polite people," one middle-aged Cuban said, "but the generation coming up is off the rails." Young women complain that the strutting macho behavior in the street of 14 and 15-year-old boys (never self-effacing in Latin countries) is worse than ever and often of frightening effrontery.

The government has stepped up police surveillance in this area lately, but overplayed its hand crudely last year when the few dozen long-haired drifters were whisked off the streets of Havana so that visitors to the world Youth Festival would not get a bad impression. The boys did not reappear for months and were reticent about what had happened to them when they returned.

Kids are further upset by unstable domestic arrangements. One woman who lives along the street from a friend of mine in Havana is 27, has children 13, 11 and eight, and is married to her third husband. The marriage-divorce merry-go-round can spin rapidly in Cuba, accelerated by immediate qualification for extra rations when one marries (including beer) or has a child. The government recently put the brakes on somewhat by charging a fee for a divorce certificate.

Abortion is free, and after the first one a woman or girl is compulsorily fitted with an IUD. But a great many people marry in their mid-teens and, machismo again, there is not much fuss if a man impregnates a 13-year-old girl. If you are ready, then you are old enough, is still a powerful attitude. No one turns a hair at schoolgirls drinking in bars as long as they, like any other female, arrive accompanied by a man.

Youngsters in Cuba grow up to be aware of the enormous pressure on girls to pull, and hang on to, a man. Dye to make hair blonde fetches phenomenal prices on the black market; the eyes of office girls waiting for a bus follow the tailored jeans and gold medallions of a Canadian woman tourist all the way to the corner of the block. In the home of a modern couple, in touch with other ways of life elsewhere, the schoolgirl daughters hear their mother refuse a guest's offer to help with the cooking by saying, "That's what I'm here for."

The changes worked by the revolution have opened dozens of closed doors, and many Cuban children have seized the chance to acquire skills and tastes of many kinds. But a high proportion of the young achievers come from families which used to be part of a well-to-do minority, and provide a home life in which learning is esteemed. This is changing as universal compulsory education takes hold, but slowly.

The most heartening thing about Cuban kids is the sense of community and mutual support among them. One detects no class consciousness, everyone being lumped together in one school system. And the extent to which the post-revolution generation is free of the racial tensions of other Caribbean countries is a marvel. You still don't see much hand-holding across the color lines, but there is none of that Jamaican obsession with width of noses, straightness of hair and so on.

Even adults with long diatribes of complaints about Cuba now will tell you that the school and university system is straight — places and prizes are gained or lost on merit. Officials sound off about not enough bright youngsters joining the youth wing of the Communist Party, but the career of a child who turns down an approach from the party does not suffer.

However, the regime is keen that its investment in education should pay off. After graduation, every young person has to work where directed for two years. It is almost impossible for him to take his skills abroad, except as part of Cuban aid to the Third World on a limited secondment.

Children who say hello to foreigners in the street ask about American and British pop music, and they would love to be able to travel abroad. "They don't have to worry about whether I'd come back," one boy said. "All my family and friends are here and it's a great place to live — of course I wouldn't go for good."

But the kids make do with yuma (anything acquired from the "capitalist world") and the pop radio stations in Florida, easily picked up in Cuba. (The other night the station ran several hours of non-stop Beatle records, transfixing thousands of Cuban kids for the duration — just as their parents stayed home the night Cuban TV showed Gone with the Wind recently).

The children who work hard in school do so for much the same reasons as anywhere else. They enjoy learning and solving problems, and they know that top marks now mean good jobs later.

. . . hardship for others

By MARK GAYN
Toronto Star

HAVANA — You need a reservation to get a table at one of the posh restaurants here, at "1830" (in a seaside villa said to have been built by a merchant prince for a mistress), at La Torre, atop a skyscraper, or at the Floridita, whose long bar once had Ernest Hemingway for a steady customer.

Such restaurants are crowded, and the reason is not the rich foreign visitors but Cuba's own elite — the writers, the party and security officials, the bureaucrats, all of whom think nothing of paying $30 or $40 per person for a good meal.

This scene of well-being is in stark contrast to the life of the common man and his wife. Twenty years after Fidel Castro came down from the mountains, Cuba still lives as if war is imminent. The food and clothing rations are meager; long queues wait by the hour for buses that are scarce and old; and life in general is as lean and trying as in any communist country.

Industry booms but food short

Fidel's revolution has triumphed probably beyond his own dreams. The nation is securely his There is an industrial boom of sorts. Cuban armies are taking part in two wars in distant African lands. Cuba has given extensive, and sometimes decisive, aid to other revolutions — most notably that in Nicaragua.

But consider these food rations on which 98 per cent of Cuba's nine million people have to live:

Three cans of condensed milk per person every 34 days; six pounds of rice every month; four ounces of beans (once the mainstay of the Cuban diet) a month; one and one half pounds of fat or cooking oil a month; a four-ounce bottle of tomato sauce a month, but rarely available; 12 ounces of meat (or fowl) per person every 10 days.

At the Floridita, they will keep piling rolls and butter on your plate. For the non-privileged Cubans, the bread ration is half a pound a day and the butter alotment is one pound per person every three months. This has always been a nation of coffee drinkers — but no longer. The coffee ration is one and one half ounces per week.

The toilet paper is rationed at one roll per month. The soap ration is two cakes a month — one laundry, the other toilet. Fruits and vegetables are unrationed, but the supply in the cities is poor and irregular, and only families with children below the age of seven can buy oranges. This is the height of the fruit season, but last week the market in this capital had none for sale — no papaya, no mangoes, no oranges or grapefruit, and no bananas, except at the fancy restaurants.

And if in this nation of humid, tropical heat a Cuban thirsts for soft drinks, the government provides him with a ration of 24 small bottles every four months.

Every package of cigarettes carries a health warning, and there is a campaign against smoking (with the most famous cigar consumer of them all, Fidel, still puffing away all through his waking hours). But the Cubans untroubled by the warning are given a ration of two cigars or two packs of cigarettes every 15 days. If this is not enough, the smoker can go into the free market, where a pack of the "Populares" sells for the equivalent of $2.08 U.S.

The non-rationed food items include noodles, eggs and, unaccountably, yogurt. Fish is a sore point with the Cubans, who live surrounded by seas alive with it. In theory, a housewife can buy any quantity, but in fact it is rarely available, and there is a constant complaint that the people have to eat either frozen or spoiled fish.

The clothing rations are just as ungenerous. A woman is entitled to one pair of dress shoes a year, a man to one pair of dress and one pair of work shoes. A woman can get three yards each of "first-class" and "second-class" dress material a year, two brassieres every six months (all Cuban women wear them), two pairs of panties and two pairs of stockings. The men can get one suit and one pair of work pants a year, and one dress and one work shirt every month. And, as a sort of bonus, men and women are allowed every six months to pick an item from this list: a girdle, a blouse, a skirt, a dress, a handbag, a bathing suit, a raincoat, a pair of men's slacks, and two pieces of underwear.

The lean rations reflect the strain caused by Cuba's two main preoccupations — the war in Africa and the country's industrialization. The Soviets pay for the arms used by the Cuban expeditionary forces in Africa, and, on top of that, provide a reputed $4 million a day in ecomomic aid. But, still, the war is an immense burden on the economy — for the provision of hospitals, for the rotation of troops, for the strain caused by the absence of so many young men, of doctors, teachers, agronomists and sanitation men now spread from South Yemen to Nicaragua (where there are now 1,000 Cuban doctors).

The second burden is that of the industrial construction. Cuba's economy remains based on just one commodity — sugar — and Fidel is determined to end this. Recently, I spent a few days in Cienfuegos, a seaport picked by Fidel as one of Cuba's new industrial centres.

A small regiment of East German technicians is building there a $250 million cement plant; the Bulgarians are helping to put up a $30 million irrigation machinery factory; other East Europeans are overseeing the erection of a Soviet-supplied nuclear plant an hour's drive from the city.

At the docks of the enormous Tricontinental Bulk Sugar Terminal, raw sugar that looks like sawdust and tastes delicious is moving from freight cars to the S.S. Bolivar, bound for Toronto. There is also the British-built $90-million nitrogen fertilizer plant that was completed five years ago, but has never functioned properly, and is now having parts of it rebuilt.

In fact, this seems to be a common woe — plants are not built on time, or are functioning improperly, at a fraction of the promised capacity. There is said to be a shortage of skilled construction workers, who have gone away to foreign wars.

Today, Fidel's regime is solidly entrenched, and spreading its influence both in the Caribbean and in distant Africa and the Middle East. Thanks to a protective Soviet shield, it need not worry about invasions. But, oddly, it remains on a war basis — with no respite for its people.

Families squeezed in one room

How much have Fidel's policies cost Cuba? A part of the price is paid by the people who, for lack of housing construction, are packed into decaying buildings, a family to a room. Young people cannot get married for lack of an apartment, and lovers live apart, each in his or her workers' dormitory. A middle-aged official says he and his wife are living with her parents — "I applied for an apartment four years ago, but there's no hope of getting it soon."

The price can be seen in the long queues waiting in poorly-stocked stores — complaining but waiting. In justice to Fidel, he has given his people two invaluable services — free medical aid and good schools. But, a Cuban informant says, "not all of us are convinced this is enough for 20 years of very hard work."

Nine suspended

VANCOUVER (CP) — Nine members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 213 have each been fined $1,000 and suspended from union affairs for from three to six years after being found guilty of violating the union constitution.

Eight of the nine unionists, who are suspended from holding union office or attending meetings but not from working at union jobs, said they were tried in adsentia.

The ninth defendant, Dusty Rhodes, has been granted a retrial by the international.

The internal charges were laid by Cliff Rundgren, Local 213 business agent, after an election leaflet last June contained statements about his performance and handling of union funds.

Doctor appeals over drug ban

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Vancouver doctor banned from prescribing narcotics launched court action Tuesday against federal Health Minister David Crombie and T. Reid McKim, director of the Bureau of Dangerous Drugs, in an effort to get the ban lifted.

Dr. Robert G. Schulze, who defied authority by prescribing a morphine maintenance program for an addict patient, has applied in Federal Court for an injunction restraining Crombie and McKim from telling pharmacies not to fill his narcotic prescriptions.

Dr. Schulze informed authorities in August that he had put a patient on the program to cope with her addiction.

The Bureau of Dangerous Drugs subsequently banned him from prescribing narcotics for a year.

A statement of claim filed in the trial division of the court asks that Crombie and McKim be restrained from giving any notices to licensed dealers or pharmacists in British Columbia not to fill Dr. Schulze's prescriptions for narcotic drugs unless he is convicted of violating a section of the Narcotic Control Regulations.

The statement also asks for general and special damages for loss of income and other expenses.

The statement notes that the Bureau of Dangerous Drugs informed Dr. Schulze in September that it considered him to have violated section 38(1) of the Narcotic Control Regulations, and that after consultation with the College of Physicians and Surgeons of B.C., a notice was being issued to all pharmacists not to fill his prescriptions for narcotic drugs other than oral ones.

Section 38 says that a doctor can prescribe a narcotic to a patient under his care and for a condition for which the patient is receiving treatment.

But the statement of claim notes that Dr. Schulze has never been charged with or convicted of violating the Narcotic Control Regulations.

Lawyer John Conroy, who is acting for Dr. Schulze, said the legal action is based on the premise that the Bureau of Dangerous Drugs accused the doctor of violating the section then imposed the prescription ban without first giving him a fair hearing.

Plane down, three safe

QUESNEL (CP) — All three persons aboard a twin-engine Aero Commander aircraft survived a crash landing 20 kilometres south of here Tuesday after the plane developed engine trouble shortly after takeoff from Quesnel Airport.

The pilot, Kathy Davenport, 28, of Vancouver and Glenda Bonney, 28, of Kelowna, were in satisfactory condition in hospital. Bonney's husband, Brian, 29, was released from hospital after receiving treatment for minor injuries.

A spokesman for six locked out airport radio operators claims the three aboard the plane were fortunate someone saw the plane go down because the pilot could not contact anyone by radio. Radio operators at small airports across Canada went on strike Tuesday to protest delays in negotiations with the transport ministry.

"If we had been on duty, the pilot could have notified us of any problems," said Rick Patterson. "They're lucky someone saw them go down. Otherwise no one would have known about it."

However, Steve Ryback, a ministry spokesman, said Patterson's charge was "a matter of speculation" and the radio operators could not have prevented the crash.

An RCMP spokesman said the plane's left wing hit a tree before crash-landing in a field.

The plane, owned by Futura Airlines Ltd. of Richmond, was bound for Williams Lake and operating under visual flight rules when it took off because no radio operators were on duty.

Other airports in B.C. have not been severely affected by the strike because the ministry is allowed to use a designated employee schedule when a work slow-down or strike occurs.

Slowdown ties up builders

SURREY (CP) — A five-week backlog on gas hookups is tying up construction on scores of buildings in two Vancouver-area communities as 500 B.C. Hydro workers participate in a work slowdown.

Meanwhile, pickets have surfaced at some job sites. And the unions behind the slowdown — the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the Office and Technical Employees Union — can now legally strike.

Relations between Hydro and the workers turned sour last week after the Crown utility locked out 24 Fraser Valley gas and office workers, say union officials.

Union officials say action will be taken if the utility continues to lock out employees who refuse to perform tasks outside their job description.

Talks between Hydro and office and gas workers broke off last month following a membership rejection of the company's three-step pay offer of 15 per cent over two years.

Bonds

TORONTO (CP) — Prices were higher in light trading on the Canadian bond market Tuesday, due largely to an initial gain of 10-32 in the long U.S. Treasury bills. Analysts at Wood Gundy Ltd. said the stronger market was also attributed to dealer sortcoverings.

The short end of the market was unchanged. Mid-, long-term and provincial issues gained one-eighth of a point. Corporate issues remained the same.

Before the judge

Judge Harold Alder in provincial court Tuesday ordered the release of a 17-year-old charged with an attempted armed holdup Sunday night in Saanich.

Todd Elmer Axelson, 1849 Chimo, was charged with the attempted robbery of Tan's Food Market, 1652 McRae, as well as conspiracy with a juvenile to commit armed robbery, using a disguise during a holdup attempt, possession of a knife dangerous to the public peace, and theft of an auto when he first appeared Monday.

He was released on $2,000 recognizance and remanded until next Tuesday for election of his trial method.

Alder also ordered a 9:30 p.m. curfew.

Released on $1,000 cash deposit or one surety each were 18-year-old Stanley Allan Smith, 1712 Newton, and 19-year-old John Patrick Aitkens, 2549 Dowler.

They were jointly charged with possession of a shotgun dangerous to the public peace, carrying a shotgun concealed in a blanket, and possession of a firearm without a permit.

Alder imposed an 11 p.m. curfew and ordered the pair not to consume alcohol.

They were remanded until next Tuesday for election.

Kerry Gail Duncan, 25, of 337 St. James, was charged with being an accessory after the fact.

She was charged in connection with Vaughan Grant Armstrong being unlawfully at large from Wilkinson Road jail Oct. 2.

A 20-year-old was jailed for 14 days after pleading guilty to mischief causing wilful damage.

Brian John Birks, 2721 Henderson, received the sentence when Judge Alder learned he had previous convictions for theft, mischief and breaking and entering, receiving a 60-day jail term April 30, 1978, for the last offence.

Crown counsel Nicholas Lang said the incident occurred about 4:20 a.m. Sept. 21 when a resident at 2090 Carrick saw Birks on the property. Birks took a downspout and threw it like a spear through a window as the resident was calling Oak Bay police.

When police arrived they spotted Birks running across the back yard.

"You haven't got your guns out, eh?" Birks asked the officers.

After hearing they didn't, Birks began to run away but was tackled and handcuffed.

Defence lawyer Brian MacKenzie said Birks had been drinking and was on his way home.

Quoting from the Bible, a 29-year-old Californian received a nominal, one-day jail sentence after deciding to plead guilty to possession of marijuana.

Grady Hamilton Stark was stopped in a vehicle on Salt Spring Island about 4:40 p.m. Sunday, Crown counsel Elke Kluge told the court. He produced a baggie of marijuana after an RCMP officer, who smelled marijuana smoke in the car, asked if Stark had any in his possession.

Stark initially stated he was going by the law of God, quoting Verse 29, Chapter 1, the Book of Genesis: "Behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed which is upon the face of the earth."

After Alder refused to accept the reading as a defence, Stark said he was guilty "under your law."

Judge Fred Green imposed a fine and jail term on a 23-year-old man who pleaded guilty to impaired driving and driving while suspended.

Robert William Steer, 40 Lurline, was fined $375 on the drinking-driving count and given an 18-day, intermittent sentence on the other.

Crown counsel N. K. Varma said Steer was convicted April 24, 1978, in Victoria of dangerous driving and given a three-month jail term, and convicted Jan. 10 this year in Victoria of driving while under suspension and received 14 days.

Man loses damage suit against RCMP officer

A suit against an RCMP constable alleged to have broken a man's finger while arresting him for drunkenness was dismissed Tuesday in B.C. Supreme Court here before Mr. Justice D.E. Andrews.

The judge called it an unfortunate evening and said he thought the plaintiff and defendant were essentially truthful about the incident in which 25-year-old David John Wilson, then of Nanaimo, sought general and special damages from Constable Bruce Lloyd Waite, 31, who arrested him in the Ladysmith detachment Nov. 26, 1978.

Although Wilson had not resisted arrest he discovered after being locked in a cell that his hand was hurt. He told the court he pounded on the door for some time before he got medical attention which disclosed a triple fracture.

The court said it was equally consistent that Wilson had hurt his hand on the door and dismissed the action with costs.

Andrews said he found the facts essentially as described by the defendant. On balance of probability, he said it was more likely the sober policeman's account was more reliable than the story of the plaintiff, who admitted he had been drinking the evening before.

The constable told the court the plaintiff was drunk and described Wilson's refusal to leave the police station when given the opportunity, his abusive language and refusal to listen to reason.

Wilson said he was grabbed, dragged and dropped on a concrete cell floor.

Later, when Wilson was driven to hospital, Waite said he was apologetic and co-operative and told the constable that when he was drunk he would listen to nobody.

Wilson also asked the policeman how his hand had been hurt, and Waite had replied he did not know but suspected it was from banging on the cell.

Max Sikal, a guard at the police station, said he observed Wilson entering the building, staggering up the stairs, heard Wilson's abusive language and the constable saying, "Go home and sober up." Wilson refused and Waite then said, "You're drunk in a public place and I'm going to place you under arrest."

Sikal then heard a scuffle and thump as he went to open a cell for the new prisoner.

Wilson had gone into the station because a friend had been picked up for a breath alcohol test and complained of being mistreated by police.

Waite was represented by Robert Wismer of Vancouver, and Wilson by Donald E. Taylor of Duncan.

Mall traffic ban studied

A proposal to eliminate most traffic from the Government Street mall was referred Tuesday to the Central Business District advisory committee.

All but tour and transit buses would be barred from entering the mall at its south end by Humboldt, although cars could still enter and cross Government from the side streets of Courtney, Broughton, Fort and View.

Traffic committee chairman Bill McElroy said Government has become so saturated with traffic it has a deleterious effect on business. Some days the through traffic is so thick, cars waiting to cross the mall are backed up for a block or two on the side streets.

Traffic engineer Derek Wild told aldermen that the intersections at each end of the two-lane one-way mall are very crowded and some drivers and pedestrians find them confusing. Eliminating the through traffic and forcing it over to Wharf or Douglas should ease the problem.

The only other alternative, said Wild, is to put in stoplights at two more intersections on Government. It would cost $50,000 although Wild said it wouldn't solve the congestion at Government and Yates.

Banning through traffic at Humboldt and at Yates would eliminate traffic in peak periods.

The traffic engineer said a full mall closed to all traffic is not feasible, but the partial ban is and has the advantages of costing very little and improving access to the Old Town section of Victoria.

Provincial grant for centre

Dr. Hugh Keenleyside announced Tuesday the provincial goverment has contributed an initial $75,000 grant and promised 200 acres of land for a major horticultural centre in Saanich.

Keenleyside is chairman of the horticultural centre steering committee.

He said the goverment has agreed to lease Crown land next to Camosun College's Interurban Campus for development of the horticultural centre.

The centre will include a large exhibition hall, 20 pavillions established by Pacific Rim countries, a solar-powered greenhouse, demonstration gardens, a food research laboratory and a horticulture school.

About 126 acres of land will be set aside for the horticulture centre and the rest of the land will be held for future expansion of it and other government projects.

The centre will border a forestry project, Tillicum Lodge and Camosun College. Camosun's existing horticulture courses will be expanded to make use of the horticultural facilities next door.

Keeneyside, who made the announcement after a committee executive meeting, said a co-ordinator will be hired soon to put together a pitch to senior governments and private corporations for money.

Provincial Secretary Hugh Curtis will be shown a draft constitution before the steering committee forms a non-profit society.

Regional elections preferred

Regional board directors should be elected, not appointed, Saanich council will tell Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm.

The minister is on a province-wide tour gathering opinions from local politicians on the operation of regional districts.

Saanich meets Vander Zalm at 9:30 a.m. in Newcombe Auditorium on Oct. 26.

In a recent discussion paper Vander Zalm suggests ways to change board structure. He prefers a county system and removal of land-use planning responsibility in rural areas from regional districts.

Heritage compensation sought

The owner of the former Saanich municipal hall at Royal Oak wants compensation for council's decision to revoke his demolition permit and designate the building a heritage structure.

H.J. Ben-Oliel of Crescent Construction Corp. said in a letter to council he was planning to tear down the building and turn the site into a retail commercial.

Oliel said his permit was revoked without warning and now he is left with an empty, useless building.

Mayor Mel Couvelier suggested turning the building into a neighborhood pub.

Ald. John Mika said the municipality could try for provincial grants to develop a heritage area in Royal Oak that would include the elementary school and several other historic buildings.

The old municipal hall could be bought from its owner and transferred to the school property, Mika said.

Staff has been asked to to put together a report suggesting ways the former hall can be used.

$1.5M target for Bennett Memorial Fund

A province-wide campaign is under way to raise $1.5 million from business, government and the public for student scholarships and a special university professorship in public administration in honor of the late W.A.C. Bennett.

Floyd Fairclough of the University of Victoria said Tuesday half the money would be used to endow the position at UVic, which has the only school of public administration in Western Canada.

Another $250,000 would finance scholarships for students enrolled in the school's two-year master's degree program, he said.

The remainder of the fund would provide one $500 bursary every year to a student in each of B.C.'s 90 school districts for any form of post-secondary education.

The Central Okanagan Foundation, a charitable organization based in Kelowna and founded several years ago, would administer this money.

Only the interest earned on the $1.5 million would be used, said Fairclough.

Under the chairmanship of Wesley Black, former provincial secretary, the W.A.C. Bennett Memorial Fund opened a radio and newspaper advertising campaign last week to solicit donations.

"At the same time we're trying to organize the major corporations," said Fairclough.

Some have already agreed to pledge amounts over three years, while the chartered banks have agreed to accept public donations and forward them to the fund.

The proposal for a chair of public administration grew out of a conversation Black had with the Bennett family at the time of his funeral regarding a suitable memorial.

At the same time, said Fairclough, the Central Okanagan Foundation proposed the high school bursaries, and the two agreed to merge their campaigns for funds.

This month Black sent letters to municipalities and school districts asking them to donate.

"The municipalities in this province stand to benefit materially from an assured and continuing supply of highly trained and motivated public servants," said the letter from Black, who recently graduated from the UVic program.

"Training in public administration cuts across all party lines, includes all levels of government."

The request came to the Greater Victoria intermunicipal committee — composed of mayors and aldermen from the four core municipalities — but it was deferred until members got more information on the goals of the fund-raising campaign.

BCR ghost in court

VANCOUVER (CP) — The ghost of British Columbia Railway's unfinished Dease Lake extension, put to rest more than two years ago, was resurrected this week at a B.C. Supreme Court trial in which two contractors are suing the railway for damages totalling $8 million.

Keen Industries Ltd. and its subsidiary, K. R. M. Construction Ltd., allege that the Crown railway, in calling tenders for work on the northwestern B.C. extension, either "deliberately or recklessly" understated quantities of earth to be moved on the project.

Lawyer Douglas McK. Brown, representing the two companies, alleged that "preposterous errors" in the tender documents establish that the railway's conduct amounted to civil fraud.

Work on the 540-kilometre extension was halted in April, 1977, under a federal-provincial agreement after expenditures of $191 million. Completion cost was estimated at $311 million.

The court was told that the disputed contracts were let by the former Social Credit government of the late W. A. C. Bennett. Dave Barrett, whose New Democratic Party government ousted Bennett, refused to review the contracts in 1974.

Brown alleged that quantities in the railway's tender documents were deliberately understated because the directors were committed to low construction costs when they resolved to build the extension in 1969.

The lawyer said Michael Wakely, the railway's chief engineer, estimated the cost at $80 million but was told by J. S. Broadbent, the railway's general manager at the time, that the estimate was too high because he had given a commitment to the directors to build the extension for $68 million.

"Without any other information or the exercise of any particular engineering skill, Wakely or those under his direction arbitrarily reduced the buddget by about $12 million to come up with a figure of approximately $68 million," Brown told the court.

The lawyer alleges that the arbitrary reduction of the estimate caused a corresponding reduction in quantities contained in the railway's tender documents, which in turn resulted in massive overruns by the contractors.

Anti-union bias blamed in food study

A report prepared for a legislature committee which recommends that supermarket chains be allowed to hire strikebreakers during contract disputes does not address the issue of high food prices, a union president said Tuesday.

"They're not speaking to the issue at all," Rudy Krickan, president of the Vancouver local of the Retail Clerks Union said in an interview.

"They're just expressing their bias against unions," Krickan said of the researchers who prepared the report for a select committee on agriculture.

The recommendation was included in a two-volume collection of research reports released Monday that had been prepared for the committee's five-year, $3-million examination of food prices. It has not been adopted as government policy.

The report said store profits have been declining over the past five years and concluded the biggest factor in the decline is labor costs.

It recommended that retailers and wholesalers be permitted to hire temporary help during a strike and that secondary picketing by unions on strike be disallowed.

This way, the cost of labor could be kept down and be reflected in the cost of food, the report said.

"The way this report reads is that food prices would only go up once a year — when our new contract goes into effect," Krickan said. "But you and I know that food prices are going up every day."

He said the supermarket chains, which form the greatest part of the industry, are organized but supermarkets continue to have lower prices than outlets that operate without employees who belong to a union.

Jim Kinnaird, president of the B.C. Federation of Labor, said the report was a whitewash.

"The whole thing is just the same as if the government had asked the food industry to investigate itself," he said in a statement.

Kinnaird contended that there should have been public hearings because the report used biased research to blame labor for high food prices.

Krickan said the committee did not look hard enough at marketing boards, crop conditions and the devalued Canadian dollar in trying to determine where supermarkets' profit margins are shrinking.

The report found that four companies account for more than 50 per cent of the food sold in B.C. and more than 90 per cent of the independent wholesale trade is accounted for by two companies, Kelly Douglas (wholesaler for Super Valu) and H.Y. Louie.

It also found that Super Valu and Safeway operate in a relationship that eliminates the need for "costly cut-throat competition."

While the impact on the consumer is not as bad as people might suspect, "there would nevertheless be some benefits derived from having more competitors in those markets," the report said.

Meanwhile, Ed Pratt, head of the B.C. Coast Vegetable Marketing Board, said Monday that the government should clamp down on strikes in the food industry by declaring it an essential service.

Act soon on heroin, feds urged

Health Minister Bob McClelland said Tuesday he has told Ottawa quick federal action is needed because B.C.'s entire controversial Heroin Treatment Act has been ruled outside the purview of the province.

The province has served notice of appeal of B.C. Supreme Court Justice Allan McEachern's decision.

McClelland said this should result in the status quo being maintained so B.C. can continue with its programs until Ottawa has had an opportunity to act.

A B.C. delegation went to Ottawa Monday with the news that the court judgment had ruled all of the drug treatment programs run by the province out of order.

McClelland initially understood that the judgment covered only the compulsory aspect of the treatment program.

But the minister said lawyers in the attorney-general's ministry advised him and Attorney-General Garde Gardom that since the entire Act was ruled Ultra Vires (outside the power) of the province, then all drug treatment programs — voluntary or otherwise — are in effect federal responsibility and not to be operated by the province.

The minister Monday told federal Health Minister David Crombie, Solicitor-General Allan Lawrence and Justice Minister Jacques Flynn every drug rehabilitation program in Canada is now a federal responsibility.

"In effect, all heroin treatment programs in my province are out of business."

If B.C. was trying to shock Ottawa into quick action, it appears to have worked.

McClelland said the day after the meeting he read in the Toronto newspapers all three federal ministers say they are willing to participate with B.C. on drug treatment programs.

He said the federal officials — while not giving firm commitments — have agreed to participate financially and make changes in the Criminal Code of Canada so B.C. can under federal authority continue to operate its rehabilitation programs.

While the appeal is being considered and while waiting for Ottawa action, McClelland said he is determined to keep the Brannen Lake treatment centre and other projects in operation.

The situation created by McEachern's ruling puts B.C. in an unacceptable dilemma, McClelland and Gardon called on Ottawa to assume operating responsibility for the existing B.C. programs until a mechanism can be established so B.C. can operate the programs on behalf of, or in partnership with, the federal government.

And they called for a pilot project within the provincial Heroin Treatment Program with costs to be shared equally between the two governments.

B.C. also wants increased drug enforcement manpower in B.C., expanded customs and overseas intelligence surveillance and a co-ordinated prosecution unit to focus on career criminal traffickers.

prices by 30 per cent to $1.30 or more a gallon. This would have been on top of proposed increases of $4 a barrel (12 to 15 cents a gallon) in each of the next five or six years in the domestic well-head price for crude oil.

He said that at a Thanksgiving Day meeting in Montreal Lougheed never discussed the excise-tax proposal and a number of other elements in the complex energy package because he quickly decided Alberta would be unable to accept even the first series of proposals on crude-oil pricing.

Specifically, the Alberta premier rejected a proposal to create a new formula for splitting up the approximately $3 billion in new oil revenues that would be created each year if a $4-a-barrel increase was implemented.

Carruthers said there are indications the government must be prepared to act on its own if it cannot reach agreement with the provinces.

The CBC National said the price of heating oil will likely rise by 3½ cents a gallon in March and 10½ cents in September. It said that as part of the policy natural gas prices would be deregulated and Ottawa will subsidize homeowners who convert to natural gas from oil.

The increases would mean that a typical homeowner would be paying $160 more a year for gasoline and another $140 more if his home was heated by oil.

Carter, Saudi Arabia announced it would produce 9.5 million barrels a day through the end of the year — one million barrels above the production level last spring.

"We did our part," Yamani said. "It is now your turn to do something."

He also made it clear that in return for its present increased oil production it expects the United States to produce a peace settlement in the Middle East to the Saudis' liking.

One organizer of today's mass U.S. oil price protest said angry citizens would be demonstrating in 103 cities and towns against "the most massive, blatant redistribution of wealth in history."

Billions of dollars are being transferred from "the pockets of people all over the world into the coffers of oil companies," said William Winpisinger, president of the International Association of Machinists and head of the Citizen-Labor Energy Coalition.

He called the protest STOP day, which stands for Stop the Oil Profiteers.

Gasoline and heating oil prices in the U.S. have increased by more than 40 per cent since January.

The coalition of labor, consumer, civil rights, senior citizen and other groups coordinating the protest wants Congress to put price controls back on oil and natural gas.

Sure cure for lemonphobia

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

Stepping on to a used car lot is an ordeal for people who are afraid that eager salesmen are shady characters specializing in unloading lemons.

For those who are lost when they look under a car hood, buying a second-hand vehicle is a risky business. Nobody likes to feel helpless or to be ripped off.

The B.C. Automobile Association says it can give used car purchasers peace of mind.

Its 100-point car inspection service is aimed at eliminating the fear of buying. For $30 ($24 for BCAA members) a car is checked top to bottom, inside and out, by a licenced mechanic.

A customer finds out what's wrong with a vehicle without so much as getting grease under the fingernails.

The inspection service takes a lot of the guesswork out of purchasing a used car, says Ray Elston, Victoria branch manager.

He admits the service may be more expensive than the neighborhood garage, but then, the BCAA doesn't have any ulterior motives.

"We have no axes to grind and we're not interested in selling tires. We call it as we see it."

A mechanic takes the car for a road test and runs a complete engine check for electrical problems. The body is checked for previous accident damage. All vehicle defects are described in a written report.

Elston says some people just don't know what they're looking for.

"They go ahead and buy a car and find out later they've got $2,000 in repairs on their hands."

The inspection service doesn't include an appraisal but consumers can get a pretty accurate idea of the value of a used car by using a guide book called the Sanford-Evens Gold Book of Used Cars. Dealers use a similar guide book when pricing automobiles.

People buying a used car privately should check the origin of the vehicle. If it comes from Eastern Canada chances of body rust are greater because of harsher winters and regular road salting.

Elston says it's also a good idea to make sure the seller has clear ownership by checking with the provincial motor-vehicle branch, otherwise the sheriff could knock on the door three months later demanding the car back because there is a lien against it.

Don't just take the car for a test drive around the block, the rattles and noises won't be obvious. Take it for a really long run and drive at different speeds, he recommends.

The BCAA also has a some advice for people who want to sell a used car.

It goes almost without saying the car should be in good mechanical condition and must be presented for sale as clean and shiny as possible.

A few points to remember when doing the final clean-up:

— Clean and vacuum the trunk. Jumper cables and empty transmission fluid cans littering the compartment indicate the car is less than reliable.

— Remove accumulated dirt from wheel wells with a wire brush so a prospective purchaser can see there isn't any rust. Resist the temptation to spray wheel wells with undercoating or paint; it looks suspicious.

— If the engine compartment is not already clean it's a good idea to have it steam-cleaned or de-greased. A dab of cleaner like Armor-All wiped over the engine, especially the radiator shroud and air cleaner, will perk up its appearance.

— Wax licence plates and tighten all bolts. Battered plates could lead a buyer to presume the car played tag with cement posts.

If the car does sport some wounds, get one or two written estimates from repair shops so you can prove that the damage is not as expensive as it may look.

Unless prepared to pay for a good paint job, don't bother. A $99 paint job looks cheap and will look even cheaper two weeks later. Most buyers would suspect a new paint job is hiding something — like a new accident.

If a prospective purchaser asks if the car has been in an accident, tell the truth. The seller is legally obligated to answer questions honestly.

To get an accurate market value, read the classifieds and find out what is being asked for similar cars. Don't go by lot prices. Dealers usually charge more because they are selling services such as finance-arranging or warranties.

Add up to 20 per cent of the price as a bargaining margin. Many buyers feel they are being ripped off unless they can talk the price down. And besides they like to brag to their friends that they drove a hard bargain.

The best way to advertise is by word of mouth — let someone else do the pitch. Second best are the classified newspaper ads, says the BCAA, but consider advertising mid-week to get the jump on heavy weekend competition.

If financing has to be arranged, the seller should get a deposit and write an interim agreement noting it's non-refundable, or he might wind up taking the car off the market while the prospective buyer scouts around for a better deal.

Once the sale is completed and the money has changed hands the seller should get a vehicle transfer form APV9C from the MVB or an Autoplan agent.

Give the new owner the completed, signed form and the vehicle registration.

And you've just completed the deal.

Who would have thought anyone would dare to do it? Launch an attack on the Sally Ann? That's almost sacrilegious. It's like saying down with Big Macs and Friday night shopping.

But several merchants, very recently formed into what they call the Old Town Association, are doing just that. They are criticizing the inclusion of a treatment section for alcoholics in the Salvation Army's new centre to be built soon on Wharf Street between Johnson and Yates.

In fact, it's this very attitude toward the Salvation Army, association spokesman Jim Bennett believes, that has led to city hall virtually turning a blind eye to the project. The theory, he says, is that anything the Sally Ann does must be right.

Bennett, who is relatively new in Old Town and has run his games store in Bastion Square only since May, says the merchants' association was formed three weeks ago.

"We've been forced to come together, really, out of frustration in noting very little improvement in respect to the street situation in the Old Town area," he says.

What the merchants want is police on foot patrols to "clean up" Bastion Square and cut down on increasing vandalism and break-ins that they say result from a combination of street people, winos and drunks pouring out of downtown hotels. And they'd like the government to move the liquor store from lower Yates.

What dominated their first meeting, however, was the question of the location of the Sally Ann's new centre and the merchants took a 105-name petition to city hall asking for a public hearing.

They were turned down because aldermen felt there was no reason for a hearing.

"Granted, no public hearing was required by bylaw because it was an existing use," Bennett concedes. "And for the way Old Town used to be it may have been appropriate at one time. But certainly someone must recognize that the area has changed to date and that more change will take place in the coming five years.

"Someone wasn't thinking," he says. "If they'd have asked to put it in the 700-block Yates, there would have been a war!"

This isn't a cash register mentality, as some writers have suggested, argues Bennett, as the businesses are all thriving.

"But we're embarrassed on behalf of the whole of Victoria by the street people," he says.

I'm not sure I need anyone to be embarrassed on my behalf. I can get embarrassed quite well by myself, thanks Jim. But certainly people are concerned about this rumpus as I've had several calls lately from readers upset by the attack on the Sally Ann.

"Those men are in the Harbor Light through alcohol and it just hurts me to hear these things said about them," said one woman.

"They are beautiful people who have hearts, too, and need to enjoy the centre of the city and not be pushed into the back somewhere."

No matter how beautiful they may be, Bennett and the Old Town Association would like to see them pushed as far away as possible.

It's not those inside the treatment centre he complains of, Bennett explains, but everything has a limit and for every one who is admitted probably two are turned away. And what you have then are angry alcoholics roaming the streets.

"Lower Johnson and Wharf are being used more and more each month by people walking and if the convention centre goes, it will become a major pedestrian thoroughfare overnight," Bennett says. "And it's simply idiotic to go out of your way to disgrace the area with street alcoholics."

Bennett says he can't understand why the Salvation Army doesn't move out into the country somewhere (like Saanich or Colwood) and build a treatment farm similar to the Army's successful one in the Fraser Valley.

Each year, more than 50 alcoholics from Victoria are sent over for treatment at Miracle Valley on the Mainland, explains Captain Ray Moulton of the Salvation Army. And, indeed, a farm like that on the island is something the Army would like to explore — but as well as the new centre on Wharf Street, not instead of it.

And Capt. Moulton, who is administrator of the men's residence on Johnson and is expected to run the new building, doesn't see what all the fuss is about.

"This won't be a bigger nor a different operation," he says. "It will just enable us to do a better job, hopefully.

"I was with the Army for five years in Sudbury and they redesigned the whole downtown area around us — convention centre, government buildings and all — and there was no trouble. We don't draw the alcoholics to an area. They are downtown already.

"I can really feel for the merchants, though, because that's their image of the Salvation Army. But I can tell them I have seen it work . . . and they have nothing to worry about."

Profit for new Crystal to come from $2 tab

By NORMAN GIDNEY

It will cost $2 to get into the new Crystal Garden when it opens next April, with annual passes available at $5, the Times learned Tuesday.

The charges are part of a report prepared by a subcommittee of the Provincial Capital Commission, according to Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier, a commission member who made the admission fees public at a meeting of the Victoria intermunicipal committee.

The report is also believed to state clearly as a basic principle the Crystal will be operated as a profit-making business.

Through taxes the public is already paying for the $2.2 million cost of renovating the Crystal.

The old glass-roofed brick building built by Francis Rattenbury to house a salt water swimming pool, a tea room and dance floor has been turned into a tropical arboretum and aviary, with tourist shops and a restaurant as added attractions.

A number of local tourist operators helped write the report, Couvelier said. At a very minimum they estimated the Crystal could expect 220,000 paid admissions a year plus 20,000 passholders.

In addition, the Crystal is leasing retail space to seven shops along the Douglas Street side and a 200-seat restaurant on the main floor at the south end. The successful applicants will be announced later this month.

Based on prevailing rates of $10 to $18 a square foot for prime retail space in Victoria, according to local real estate spokesmen, the 6,000-square-foot restaurant and shops totalling about another 6,000 square feet should produce $120,000 a year.

It may be higher in good years if the leases include the usual clause requiring a flat payment or a percentage of gross sales, whichever is greater.

The exact revenue estimate for admissions is not known but they should add $350,000 a year to the Crystal's coffers. With the lease revenues, the Crystal is probably planning an annual budget of at least $500,000.

It's not known what operating costs the Crystal will face — it needs to maintain heat and humidity to keep palm trees and tropical birds alive through the winter — but the permanent staff will be small, consisting of only head gardener Rex Murfitt and three assistants, a curator of birds and a general manager. More people will be hired for the tourist season.

The reason behind the Crystal's concentration on profit is to help finance the new convention centre planned for the waterfront along Wharf.

Convention centre chairman Dr. Arne Lane explained today the city agreed to pay $200,000 a year to cover part of the operating costs only if the provincial government agreed to cover the same amount.

He said the province didn't want to take it out of general revenues or lottery funds so the suggestion was made to use profits from the Crystal.

"It's a good idea and one we suggested," said Lane.

The newly renovated Crystal is counting on a spillover from the Provincial Museum down the street, which gets more than a million visitors a year. It charges no admission, alhough the possibility was raised in 1976.

The proposed admission fee structure at the Crystal would let children and senior citizens in for half price with special rates for groups. Classes of schoolchildren would get in free. The $5 annual passes would apply to whole families, while senior citizens' passes would cost $2.50.

Mediator requested by gov't professionals

The B.C. Government Professional Employees Association has voted 95 per cent in favor of strike action but the 1,000-member group's executive has opted instead for mediation.

At a press conference this morning, BCGPEA executive director Geoff Holter said he has asked the Labor Relations Board to appoint a mediator.

If mediation doesn't work, the group will resort to whatever is necessary to achieve its aims, from limited picketing to "a complete assault on government institutions around the province."

The mediation move blocks any immediate strike action, and the mediator will have 10 days to get an agreement. Either side, however, can ask him to "report out" earlier if it feels progress is unsatisfactory.

Holter said the government's first offer was 2.6 per cent. After a year's negotiations, that increased to 4.5 per cent for 1979 and 6.5 per cent for 1980.

He said his association had hoped to avoid confrontation, but the last BCGPEA settlement was 3.15 per cent, and virtually all other groups dealing with the government have achieved settlements in the 8 per cent range for 1979 and 1980.

Maritime Museum talks layoffs

The Maritime Museum may have to lay off staff next spring because Victoria's intermunicipal committee again has turned down its plea for a grant to cover operating expenses.

On Tuesday, it rejected the museum's request for reconsideration of its application last spring for $15,000 to help it out of a short-term financial crisis.

Director Hugh Cameron said the museum has enough cash to keep going until May next year but if nothing changes by then, it may have to lay off some of its staff of seven.

"We're going to have to do some pretty drastic thinking over the winter to cope with our situation," said Cameron.

Mayors Mel Couvelier of Saanich and Mike Young of Victoria told Cameron the museum should adopt a harder selling pitch aimed at tourists to bring up its annual attendance figures of about 50,000.

"You're not reaching your tourist market potential," said Couvelier.

He added that he thinks the museum has a fantastic building and a great collection but the message of self help should get back to the museum's board of trustees.

They should do something along the lines of the new Crystal Garden where the management plans to lure group tours and mount extensive promotion campaigns.

Young said the museum might try dropping its fixed $1.50 admission fee and ask only for donations, like the relatively successful Craigdarroch Castle.

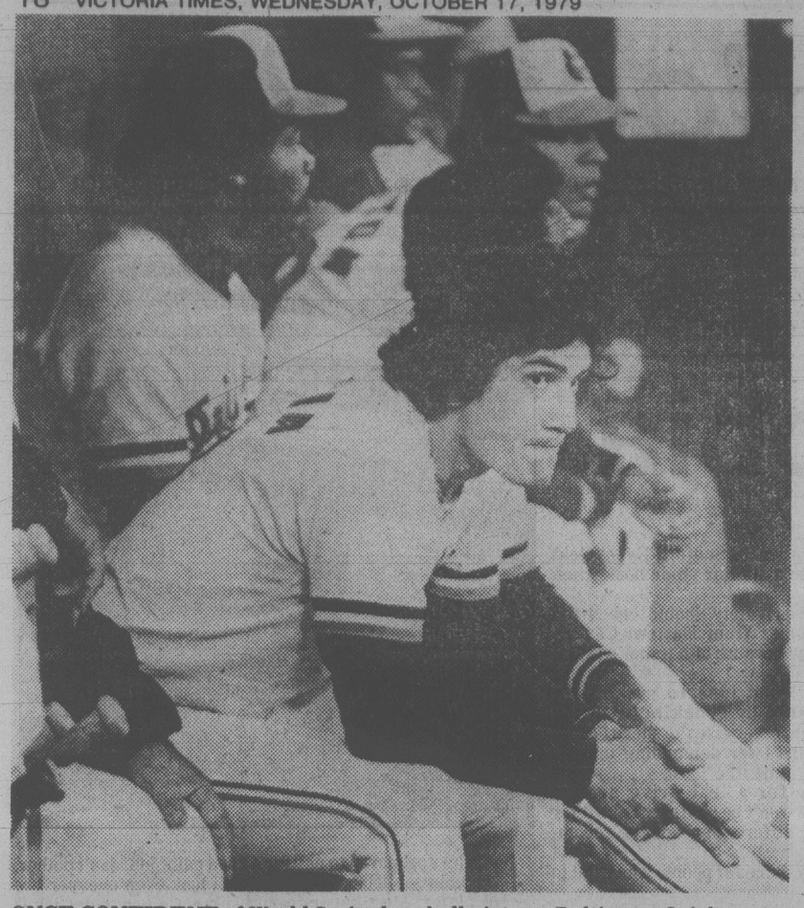
Cameron said the mayors may be right, but the museum has such a tight budget it can't afford to do these things.

In addition, it sees itself primarily as a local museum for local residents, not a tourist attraction.

Relocation of the museum to the waterfront — it's now in a dead end part of town in Bastion Square, said Cameron — is probably the best solution to the financial crisis, everyone agreed.

He said the provincial government, which now pays about half its annual budget of $129,000, has offered two sites — the old Esso station at Wharf and Government (smaller than the present museum building) and a new site just north of the Malahat Building on Wharf.

And hopes of federal money for a new building are still alive. The museum has applied to the secretary of state for designation as the national maritime museum of the Pacific, said Cameron, but no decision on this is expected until next year.



ONCE CONFIDENT of World Series baseball victory, Baltimore Orioles were in sad and subdued mood during sixth game Tuesday night. With shortstop Kiko Garcia in foreground, Orioles watch from dugout as Pittsburgh Pirates are in process of wrapping up 4-0 triumph that evened series and forced seventh game in Baltimore tonight. Ailing Candelaria puts Pirates even in series

BALTIMORE (AP) — John Candelaria stood in Pittsburgh Pirates' dressing-room after practice Monday and held aloft a crumpled ticket for the seventh game of major league baseball's World Series.

"After tomorrow night, this will be worth a lot of money," shouted Candelaria, the usually soft-spoken Pirates pitcher.

Candelaria went out Tuesday night and put his arm where his mouth was and made that last-chance ticket worth the asking price. He combined with reliever Kent Tekulve for their fourth tandem shutout of the season.

The National League-champion Pirates scored four late-inning runs and beat the American League-champion Baltimore Orioles 4-0 to even the best-of-seven series at 3-3.

Pittsburgh now is within one game of becoming the fourth team in history to rebound from a 3-1 games deficit to win the Series.

Jim Bibby, the starter in Game Four but not involved in the Pittsburgh loss, has the assignment for tonight's seventh game. He'll be opposed by Baltimore's Scott McGregor, the winner of Game Three.

The 25-year-old Candelaria went six pain-wracked innings and gave up just six hits. Tekulve followed, allowing only one hit in three innings for his second save of the series.

"He (Candelaria) pitched through pain tonight (Tuesday)," said Pittsburgh manager Chuck Tanner.

Tanner explained his star left-hander went out despite an aching side. Candelaria has been bothered with a rib-cage injury for more than a month.

"He's a money pitcher, one of the best in the game," said Tanner, who has to be living with mixed emotions. He needs one victory to gain his first Series triumph.

And win or lose, when it's over, he has to go home to New Castle, Pa., and attend the funeral of his mother, Anne, 70, who died Sunday morning.

Tanner had a pitcher warming up from the first pitch.

"We were concerned about his side all the way," Tanner explained. "If there was any indication he wasn't throwing right, I was going to go out and get him. I know it hurt him."

Candelaria, who struck out two and walked none, admitted it hurt when he pitched.

"It hurt then and it hurts now," he said after emerging from the shower.

Why did he start to leave the field after warming up in the sixth.

"I saw Chuck coming out and thought he was coming to get me," Candelaria said.

The winning runs came in the seventh inning when, with one out, Omar Moreno singled. Moreno reached second on an infield hit by Tim Foli and scored on Dave Parker's single.

Foli, who reached third on Parker's hit, then raced home on Willie Stargell's sacrifice fly. That's all the Pirates needed to hang the loss on Baltimore's Jim Palmer, who went eight innings and gave up all four Pittsburgh runs.

The Pirates wrapped it up with two more in the eighth.

Ed Ott singled with one out and irrepressible Phil Garner followed with a ground-rule double, the ball bouncing over the left field fence, sending Ott to third.

Bill Robinson delivered one run with a sacrifice fly and Omar Moreno's third hit of the night scored another.

Tekulve, meanwhile, came on in the seventh and faced just 10 batters in the final three innings.

The Pirates appear to have put their defensive act back together, playing errorless ball. Second baseman Garner and third baseman Bill Madlock made fine plays.

Garner was in the middle of one double play, increasing his World Series total to nine and breaking the record of eight set by Washington Senators' Bucky Harris in 1924.

Garner also is 11-for-21 in the six games for a .524 average — highest in the Series. He also has driven in five runs.

Garner, however, would make no prediction on tonight's seventh game.

The Orioles have scored just one run in the last 19 innings and manager Earl Weaver said he couldn't put his finger on why.

McGregor said he didn't think the Orioles were emotionally affected about losing two straight and being forced to a seventh game.

"Losing two in a row is no big deal," McGregor commented.

Cocoa price one reason Earl to stay

BALTIMORE (AP) — Earl Weaver, manager of Baltimore Orioles, says he will retire from baseball after the 1982 season.

"Definitely," he said with emphasis Tuesday.

"When I first signed with Baltimore, I targeted my retirement date as 1980. Now I find that was unrealistic. Gas has gone up from 40 cents to $1.09 and cocoa has risen from 89 cents to $1.60. Economy has forced me to stay an extra two years."

Weaver is currently serving out a three-year contract reported to be at $100,000 a year, expiring in 1980.

Asked to explain his reference to cocoa, the peppery little manager replied:

"My wife makes me a hot cup of cocoa every night."

Seventh for Cougars just ho-hum for Shupe

By ERNIE FEDORUK

At least one of the coaches should have been satisfied, but it didn't happen. At least, not completely.

The logical one for happiness would have been Jack Shupe. Victoria Cougars, his guys, skated to their seventh straight Western Hockey League victory by defeating Saskatoon Blades 6-1 Tuesday at Memorial Arena.

Some things pleased Shupe, some did not.

Shupe "liked" the penalty-killing efforts of his team and the goaltending that Kevin Eastman gave the Cougars. Victoria's coach did not like some of the positional play of his forwards or some of the moves by his defence.

"There was a lot of wandering," said Shupe of Victoria's positional play. "I had to ask the wingers if they were left or right. They were all over the ice."

The defense, he noted, "left a lot of space up the middle. Fortunately, Eastman, I thought, came up with his best game."

But the unbeaten Cougars came through with an easy victory and Shupe was not too anxious to be overly critical.

Jerome Engle, Saskatoon's coach, was more appreciative of Victoria's play than the Blades' performance. The Blades were out-shot 55-31, held together by the goaltending of Ron Loustel, and Engele thought "some of my guys didn't try hard enough. We'll see how they react when we get home and start making some changes."

Engle was impressed by Victoria: "Lethbridge, Portland and Victoria are the three best clubs we have faced, and not necessarily in that order. They are disciplined, can skate, take the body and move the puck."

But you have to side with Shupe and agree that Engle may have not seen the Cougars at their best. Despite the five-goal spread and the shots-on-goal difference, the Cougars had their good moments and their bad ones.

Victoria's power play provided a sample of Cougar inconsistencies. Four of the six Victoria goals came while the Blades were serving penalties, including two goals coming with a two-man advantage. The Western Division leaders now have pumped in 11 power-play goals in their last three games but in nine other situations when they enjoyed an edge in manpower, the Victoria attack seemed to lack authority.

Still, the Cougars didn't have too many problems after jumping off to a 2-0 lead in the first period. They ran up a 6-0 lead before Kevin McNaught spoiled Eastman's shutout with a power-play goal at 7:43 of the final period.

Winger Greg Adams sparked Victoria's offense with three goals, including the final pair in an 18-second stretch that put the game out of reach early in the third period.

Rookie Mark Morrison added a pair, joining Adams at the six-goal scoring level, while Bud McCarthy, another rookie, added the other.

Referee Glen Agar doled out 72 minutes in penalties — 42 to Saskaton and 30 to the Cougars — in a game that was more "chippy" than violent. Each team took two fighting majors but the majority of minor penalties were for pesky infractions such as slashing, holding, hooking and tripping.

There was greater violence in Medicine Hat, where Billings Bighorns literally won a hard-fought contest 5-2 from the hometown Tigers. The penalty-filled game was marred by 13 fights, nine of them in the third period, when the game got out of control.

Each team was assessed 13 major and 11 minor penalties. The Tigers were also given two 10-minute misconducts and the Bighorns one game misconduct.

Mary's back and in form

There are several new names in the Victoria Senior "B" Women's Basketball League but a familiar one dominated play for the opening of the 1979-80 campaign.

Mary Coutts scored 29 points Tuesday to spark Morriss Printing to a 63-47 victory over Jokers.

Jan Howell topped Joker scoring with 19 points.

The nine-team league includes three junior entries.

Pan-Am meet set

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Track and Field Association has announced the first Pan-American junior track meet will be staged at Laurentian University in Sudbury, Aug. 29-31.

It takes a rookie to spur Islanders

By The Canadian Press

When New York Islanders do not play aggressively they don't win hockey games, or so says their coach Al Arbour.

The Islanders lost their opening two National Hockey League games and in each defeat showed a decisive lack of spark.

Arbour, however, appears to have found the cure for the blahs with a call to Indianapolis.

The call went out Sunday, up came Yvon Vautour from the Central Hockey League and Tuesday New York defeated Atlanta Flames 5-1.

Vautour got the Islanders fired up with a fight early in the game, then later knocked in what proved to be the winning goal.

"That seemed to get us started," said Arbour about Vautour's confrontation with Atlanta's Ken Houston 20 seconds into the game. "I don't necessarily mean the fight but the fact that he was playing aggressively.

"We played our positions better. Vautour took his man out every time he had to. He was on top of the play the whole game. He showed that he wants to stay here."

Vautour feels that way, too.

"I was happy I got the call to come back up. I was disappointed when I was sent down, but I realize this is a real good club and I knew I wouldn't have gotten much chance to play. Now that I'm back, I hope I can show them enough to stick."

Vautour's goal, a 40-foot slapshot that broke a 1-1 tie, came at 10:46 of the second period on a pass from Steve Tambellini. At 6:56 of the same period, Atlanta's Bob Murdoch had tied it 1-1 on a breakaway.

The Islanders went ahead 1-0 on Dave Lewis's 35-foot slapshot at 2:18 of the first period.

Following Vatour's goal, John Tonelli made it 3-1 on a power-play score from 30 feet out. Mike Kaszycki made it 4-1 at 2:46 of the final period and Bryan Trottier added the final New York goal late in the game.

In the only other game, Dennis Maruk continued his torrid scoring pace as Washington Capitals dumped Los Angeles Kings 8-6.

Maruk scored his seventh goal of the season after just four games into an empty net to clinch the victory for the Capitals.

Guy Charron broke the 6-6 deadlock late in the third period.

The Kings' Marcel Dionne recorded his 800th NHL point, the 27th player in league history to do so, when he collected four assists.

Bobby back on skates

WINNIPEG (CP) — Bobby Hull, on the sidelines since he retired from professional hockey almost a year ago, is donning his skates again in what may be a first step toward resuming an active playing career.

John Ferguson, general manager of the National Hockey League Winnipeg Jets, said Tuesday Hull plans to resume workouts with the Jets next week.

"Bobby wants to return to the NHL," Ferguson said after meeting with Hull. "He loves hockey. Hull is a very strong man . . .a 40-year-old who has quite a physique. He's kept himself in shape."

Hull, second only to Gordie Howe in the number of goals scored in a pro hockey career, played only four games last season.

Brian Cloutier, executive director of the Jets, said Hull still has two years left on a $2.75-million contract he signed with Winnipeg in 1972, when his jump from Chicago Hawks gave the fledgling World Hockey Association a giant boost.

Rookie learns about Moses

By Canadian Press

In addition to scoring 31 points, Bill Cartwright made a valuable discovery Tuesday night.

The rookie New York centre scored four straight field goals in less than two minutes — including the go-ahead basket with only 43 seconds remaining — to lead the Knicks to a 126-121 National Basketball Association victory.

However, the only thing the seven-foot one product of the University of San Francisco wanted to talk about following the game was the way he had handled Moses Malone, the NBA's most valuable player last season.

"Tonight I learned how to play Moses Malone," said Cartwright, who played 43 minutes — more than any other player. Yet he showed no evidence of being tired.

"I decided to keep Moses away from the boards and keep him from getting inside the basket area," added the 22-year-old. "Basically, I think I succeeded. He was taking shots he didn't want to take. If I had to play against Malone tomorrow, I'd play him the same way I played him tonight."

In other games Tuesday, Phoenix Suns defeated Seattle SuperSonics 102-86, Portland Trail Blazers downed San Diego Clippers, San Antonio nipped Atlanta 118-116, New York Nets outlasted Houson 126-121, Cleveland topped Detroit 137-117, Golden State edged Denver 108-106 and Los Angeles beat Chicago 105-96.

So far this season, Cartwright has shown that durability is among his other assets. In the Knicks' other victory this season, a 125-118 overtime win over Washington Bullets last Saturday, Cartwright played 50 minutes and was the team's top scorer with 27 points.

The attendance at Madison Square Garden was 8,373, the lowest for a Knicks' game since the present Garden was opened more than 10 years ago.

Centre Alvin Adams scored 26 points and Len (Truck) Robinson added 22 as Phoenix reversed its last climactic meeting with Seattle. The game was the first between the Western Division powers since the Sonics eliminated Phoenix in the conference final last year.

Ken Alexander gets the Mann Cup game ball from Larry Bell

Tribute to a sportsman

That was quite a tribute to Ken Alexander, Monday, the funeral service for the popular sportsman drawing an overflow crowd of friends and sympathizers; and it told better than words the esteem in which he had been held in the community.

Ken loved his sport for sports sake and the part his family played in it. It was his life. Ken Jr., Frank and Kevin all have been lacrosse stars with the Shamrocks and other clubs at various times and are still associated with the sport. Frank coached Goodwill Bottlers to the Canadian intermediate championship this season, Ken Jr. was once a professional player in the NLA and now coaches Esquimalt Legion juniors while Kevin helped to give his father one of the things he wanted most for one of his sons to have — a Mann Cup victory.

It was no secret that the Cup win by the Shamrocks was what Ken lived for when he knew his days were numbered. But he also said at a pre-series workout of the teams: "I'll be happy if they do well".

Those who didn't know of Ken's serious illness wouldn't have just by talking to him. He didn't dwell on his own problems. His mind was on the game, as always, and it's perhaps axiomatic to suggest that no other fan saw more games in the past several years than Ken Alexander. And it was fitting indeed when the Mann Cup was history this year that captain Larry Bell of the Shamrocks present Ken with the game ball. For Ken, Victoria's No.1 fan by far, his final dream had come true.

It may have been overlooked but, to keep the record straight, there will be 16 teams in the National Hockey League playoffs next spring. That has to be a record of sorts with only 21 teams to start with. But that's it. The top four teams in each of the divisions automatically qualify for the playoffs plus the 12 teams from any section with the next highest point totals. From there it's all 16 with the teams with the most points meeting the teams with the least, second most vs second least and so on in best-of-five series. Quarterfinals, semifinals and finals will be best-of-seven series.

Jim Rutledge is off to a fine start in his bid for a Professional Golfers Association card and everyone is hoping he will succeed. He has youth on his side, can hit the long ball but, more important, his attitude may be his biggest attribute. He is prepared to bide his time if need be because he knows that hero status does not come overnight. Besides, it would be a great time to move into that select company as the old guard is simply that now, and getting older. And with a new name at the top almost every week, it would be great looking for a Victorian, for a change. And here's a cheer for Dale Shaw. She deserves "A" for effort in her LPGA career plus the hope she might yet [illegible] into the bigger type in the prize list. Heaven knows, she's tried.

The thoroughbreds are off and running again, but one of the sport's biggest boosters won't be [illegible] his horse run here after [illegible] Todd, a director of the Capital Turf Club, was looking forward to running the four-year old filly Kan Tuk at the Sandown meeting, but unfortunately Kan Tuk was claimed from him on the final day of the Ex-Park meeting . . . There was disappointment recently too for former publicist Harry Filion and now the presiding steward at Sandown when his promising two-year old colt Early Riser died from colic. Early Riser had won once and been in the money three times in five starts.

Thistles make it nine; Spectrum trips Tyees

Mt. Douglas Thistles clearly established themselves as the class of the preliminary round of the Greater Victoria High School Soccer League Tuesday with a smashing 13-1 victory over Belmont Braves.

Victory was the ninth straight for Mt. Douglas which has scored 49 goals while giving up only four.

Meanwhile, second-place Victoria High Tyees were upset by Spectrum 1-0 at Vic High. It was the Tyees' second straight loss, having bowed to Mt. Douglas last week.

Michaek Kadar scored the only goal of the game in the first half and goalkeeper Lorne Gale preserved the shutout.

Victory moved Spectrum into third place, one point ahead of Reynolds Roadrunners, who defeated Esquimalt Dockers 4-1.

In other games, Oak Bay downed Stellys Stingers 5-1 and Parkland defeated Claremont 3-1.

Keith Smith and Denis Mamic each scored three goals for the Thistles. Dave Niddrie and Rob Wallace each scored twice while Mark Crisp, Louis Scigliano and Dave Shortt scored once.

Mark Wyatt scored three goals for Oak Bay and Jeff Courtnall had two. Mark Vale scored for Stelly's.

Neil Johnston scored two goals for Reynolds while Greg Pynn and Manuel Achadhina each scored once. Neil Woodington scored for Esquimalt.

John Ibbotson had two goals for Parkland and Todd Holt one.

There is one game remaining in the preliminary round, Oak Bay meeting Parkland at Oak Bay today.

Oak Bay can move into third place with a victory. Bays would then be tied with Spectrum but would take third by virtue of a better games-won record.

Top five teams — Mt. Douglas, Vic High, Spectrum, Reynolds, Oak Bay — now move into a single round-robin series to decide the four semi-finalists for the league championship Colonist Cup.

Bottom five clubs — Parkland, Claremont, Esquimalt, Belmont and Stelly's — play a similar single round-robin to determine the four semi-finalists for the Soccer Shield.

Field hockey teams head for showdown

It will be down to cases for Mt. Douglas and Spectrum in Division One of the Greater Victoria High School Girls' Field Hockey League Thursday.

That's when the one-two leaders meet at Spectrum in what obviously is the most important match of the current season.

Mt. Douglas defeated Oak Bay 3-1 Tuesday to take a one-point lead over idle Spectrum with only two games remaining on the regular schedule for each team.

Spectrum's final match next Tuesday is at Oak Bay while Mt. Douglas is drawn away against winless Norfolk House.

Laurie Gordon, Alice Snow and Anne Marr scored the Mt. Douglas goals. Krissy Monoghan scored for Oak Bay.

Oak Bay has cinched third place in the standings.

In other Division One games, Parkland defeated Vic High 2-0 and St. Michael's University School downed Norfolk House 5-1.

Diane Kok and Kathy Heal scored for Parkland. Heather McDonald scored three goals and Suzanne Crofton and Susan Kendall one each for SMU. Leslie Marsden scored for Norfolk House.

Dunsmuir (11-0) remained undefeated in Division Two with a 6-0 victory over winless Reynolds at Dunsmuir and Belmont edged Mt. Douglas B 1-0 at Belmont.

Kari Higginbotham scored two goals for Dunsmuir. Linda Bettiol, Cindy Marshall, Ruth Saunders and Colleen Devlin each scored one. Corrine Devison scored Belmont's goal.

Braves breeze

Saanich Braves ran their undefeated string in the South Island Junior "B" Hockey League to six games Tuesday night by breezing to a 10-0 victory over Lake Cowichan Baird's Trucking at Pearkes Arena.

Saanich snipers outshot their victims 63-13.

Scott Connors and Tracy Patterson each scored two goals for the Braves. Bruce Tuck, Jim Michaels, Marty Irvine, Shawn Connors, Phillip Varcoe and Wayne Himmelman scored the other goals. Braves led 2-0 after one period and 6-0 after two.

Goalkeeper Ron Allan got the shutout for Saanich. Scott Hornbrooke was the overworked netminder for Lake Cowichan.

JERRY TAGGE
... surgery required

Tagge out for season?

VANCOUVER (CP) — Quarterback Jerry Tagge may not play for British Columbia Lions again this season, the Canadian Football League club learned Tuesday when results of tests on his injured left knee disclosed torn cartilage that will require an operation.

It is not known when an operation will be performed, but if surgery is not required immediately it will be done in the off-season so Tagge can help the club as a coach.

The knee was injured in an Aug. 21 victory over Hamilton Tiger-Cats.

Neumann, Fieldgate Reed, Henley in 'Hall'

HAMILTON (CP) — Peter Neumann never was one to toot his horn, probably that's why it took the Quiet Man from St. Catharines, Ont., so long to receive his deserved rewards.

"He was the finest defensive end I ever played with or against in the Canadian Football League," said former Hamilton Tiger-Cats team-mate John Barrow.

Barrow, one of the game's outstanding defensive lineman and long ago inducted into the CFL's Hall of Fame, does more talking on the induction of Neumann into the Hall next Sunday than did Neumann in his entire career.

Neumann retired from the game in 1964, ending a 14-year stand with the Tiger-Cats in an era when Hamilton teams were synonymous with playoffs.

His last eight years he played beside Barrow, whom many observers feel was one of the outstanding players ever to perform in the league.

"His extreme quickness and lateral movement and total dedication made him the best," said Barrow.

Su[illegible] the [illegible] wart Garney Henley at the induc[illegible] mony's head table Sunday along w[illegible] ning back George Reed of Saskatchewan Roughriders and linebacker Norm Fieldgate of British Columbia Lions.

Barrow said Neumann "had a personality very similar to Garney Henley off the field, quiet and reserved."

"But he was a complete football player once he stepped on the field."

Statistics for football linemen are often elusive. But Newmann's record speaks volumes: Nine times an Eastern Conference all-star (more than any other Canadian player), a CFL all-star in 1964 (his last), eight Grey Cup games and three championships.

"In those days, if we didn't make the playoffs it was a bad time for everybody," says Neumann, now a 48-year-old distillery salesman still living in St. Catharines.

"I guess I got about $3,000 for the whole year, but it was a thrill just to make the team and play," he recalled.

Kepley remains No. 1 with Esks

EDMONTON (CP) — Dan Kepley is still the No. 1 middle linebacker of Edmonton Eskimos, coach Hugh Campbell of the Canadian Football League club says.

He was commenting on the acquisition Monday of middle linebacker Carl Crennel from Montreal Alouettes in a trade for future considerations.

Campbell said the Eskimos had been considering Crennel for some time and acquired him after Kepley received a jaw fracture in Sunday's 26-25 loss to Saskatchewan Roughriders in Regina.

Campbell said he hoped Kepley can play when the Eskimos meet Winnipeg Blue Bombers here Oct. 28. "It's a non-displacement type of fracture," he said of Kepley's injury. "It should heal rapidly."

Asked if Crennel will play in the next game, Campbell said: "That would be awfully quick for him to start."

"I don't know exactly what we'll do with him yet. All we know is that the price is right. But Dan Kepley is still the No. 1 middle linebacker in the CFL, in my opinion."

Potential for a banner ski year

By IAN MacLAINE

TORONTO (CP) — Three weeks away from the daily ritual of climbing to the top of a mountain, then rocketing at break-neck speeds down rugged slopes may not be the answer to a skier's delights.

But for Canada's national ski team, it's a breather from a schedule that began in July and has seen them training under wintry conditions in New Zealand and more recently on slushy, glacial ice runs in Europe.

"They need a break," said Andrzej Kozbial, head of Canada's alpine program who, with three members of the popular men's downhill squad attended a news conference Monday at which time a winery announced sponsorship of a World Cup race at Mont Ste. Anne, Que., March 1-2.

"It's not really a rest break since most of the team members will be pretty busy at news conferences like this one plugging the World Cup races, getting involved in fund-raising campaigns and they'll be dining with the PM (prime minister Joe Clark) later this month," Kozbial said.

For John Ritchie of Grand Forks it's a chance to assess the grand possibilities of a banner ski year. He handles the men's downhillers who rank right up there with the Austrians in that discipline.

"Certainly our men's downhill team has the best potential," said Ritchie. "There are 15 guys in the world who are in a position to win a World Cup or Olympic race and we have four of them.

"The Austrians also have four good downhillers, but they have the advantage in most races since we have to eat, sleep and live in Europe to be competitive. For that reason alone, I feel we have the best downhill skiers in the world today."

The last successful World Cup race staged in Canada was at Mont Ste. Anne in 1976. A scheduled downhill race at Whistler Mountain, B.C., last spring was cancelled, first because of weather and then because the race organizers railed to provide substantial safety precautions.

The Martini and Rossi World Cup race at Mont Ste. Anne will include two heats of giant slalom racing for both men and women racers. It is the first time the European-based winery has been involved in World Cupski races in North America.

The Quebec race will be held a week after the Winter Olympics at Lake Placid, N.Y., and the closeness of the two events almost assures the top GS racers on the circuit will be entered. The event is the 20th of 24 scheduled World Cup races this year with the first set for Dec. 5 at Val d'Isere, France.

"We'll be going back over on Nov. 9," said Kozbial. "Until then, the racers will not do much skiing, but they'll keep fit. This season'sresults mean much to our program."

The men's No. 1 downhill team — spearheaded by those high-profiled Crazy Canucks, Ken Read of Calgary; Dave Murray of Abbotsford, B.C.; Steve Podborski of Toronto and Dave Irwin of Thunder Bay, Ont. — is looked on as top-priority medal material this year.

Read has three World Cup downhill gold medals, Podborski and Irwin one each while Murray, at 26,the elder statesman on the team, has several fine medal showings and has been flirting with golds over the last couple of seasons.

Even injury-prone Irwin, who has survived several serious spills since winning his only World Cup gold at Schladming four years ago, looks fit although he admits to being somewhat behind the others so faras being fit.

"I cracked my knee cap three or four years ago and there was a loose piece in there that was causing me a lot of discomfort," said Irwin, a veteran of seven years with the national team. "I had it taken out right after the end of last season.

"It's a little stiff, but I can ski on it. What worries me, as it does most of us, is that our injuries will prevent us from running. That would be disastrous."

Irwin, a compact athlete with legs that look like granite posts, knows what it is not to be able to run and keep fit.

Two years ago he ran down his coach during a training run and suffered a severe thigh injury that prevented him from competing on the World Cup circuit for an entire season.

He started in 60th place on the ratings list last season and while he suffered pain around his knee which required constant cortisone shots and pain killers, Irwin pulled himself into 20th place in the downhill ranking.

But he's still rated behind his three team-mates, all of whom enjoy the prospect of going off early in the Cup races this year among the top seeds.

"It (the operation on his knee cap) has been healing up pretty good," Irwin said.

"There's still a pain, like arthritis. But I've been skiing on it pretty hard the last couple of weeks.

Kozbial said the national team saw its numbers depleted during the recent five-week downhill training camp at Hintertux, Austria, the same slope where Irwin suffered his serious leg injury two years ago.

Todd Brooker of Paris, Ont., and Dianne Lehodey of Calgary suffered knee injuries during training runs that are likely to keep both competitors out for the duration of the 1979-80 racing season.

"But based on what we've observed at our training camps this year, this is the best-prepared group of racers, both physically and mentally, ever to represent Canada at major ski competitions," said the coach.

Killanin can expect big storm in Taipei

TAIPEI (AFP) — Lord Killanin, chairman of the International Olympic Committee, looks set for a stormy bargaining session when he arrives here Friday to tackle the controversial question of how the two Chinas can participate in the Moscow Olympic Games next July.

Peking quit the IOC in 1958 following a row over Taiwan taking part in the 1956 Melbourne Olympics. Since then only Taiwan teams have represented China at the Games.

Killanin's trip is officially being called a three-day fact-finding visit, but it will be crucial to the successful running of the 1980 Games because the IOC executive committee will soon decide the issue of whether or not to readmit Peking to the IOC.

The Irish peer will meet here with Shen Chia-ming, chairman of Taiwan's Olympic committee, and other sports leaders for discussions on the Chinese participation question.

Peking already has accepted the latest IOC formula for allowing both Chinas to take part in the Games, but Taipei has not. The Taiwan Olympic Committee objects to changing its name, anthem or flag to comply with the formula.

Even before Killanin arrives, Shen has sounded a warning shot, criticizing the latest international sports body to admit Peking to its ranks.

In a speech Monday, Shen took to task the executive committee of the International Federation of Football Associations (FIFA) for its recent decision to arbitrarily change the name of Taiwan's soccer organization to the Chinese Football Association of Taipei from the original the Republic of China Football Association.

The executive committee's action, aimed at attempting to admit the Chinese Communist regime, is tantamount to political discrimination and violates the principle of international justice, the Taiwan Olympic Committee chairman said.

A "nugget" of information:

B.C. mining paid over $192 million in taxes last year.

During 1978, the B.C. mining industry paid over $110 million in taxes to our province, plus more than $69 million in federal taxes. Mining taxation is also felt at the local level...with over $13 million in municipal taxes paid by the industry last year.* That's a total of over $192 million, or about $75 for every British Columbian. As an important source of tax revenues for our province—and as a large scale job-producer—mining is a major contributor to the B.C. economy.

Neilson eyes the Games and the 24 ahead of him

SEATTLE, Wash. (AP) — In Canadian Scott Neilson's track and field specialty, Yuriy Syedikh of the Soviet Union won the gold medal at the 1976 Montreal Olympics and was ranked first in the world last year.

Syedikh's countryman, Sergey Litvinov, won the event at the World Cup in Montreal, and Karl-Hans Riehm of East Germany set the world record last year.

Neilson's specialty is the hammer throw, an event combining strength and bulk with finesse and technique.

The New Westminster native is the best in his specialty in the Western Hemisphere — a four-time United States collegiate champion in and the 1979 Pan-American Games champion.

But on paper, at least, he isn't in a class with Syedikh, Litvinov or Riehm.

"Right now," he said, "maybe I'm 25th in the world."

At the 1976 Olympics, Syedikh led a 1-2-3 Soviet sweep with an Olympic record throw of 77.52 metres.

In contrast, Neilson won his fourth straight collegiate crown last June with a throw of 71.175 metres and followed with two other major victories: 70.92 in his debut at the U.S. AAU championships, also in June, and 68.55 at the Pan-American Games in July.

His best throw is 71.6 metres, set in a meet at the University of Oregon last year.

But, at 22, the 6-foot-5, 250-pounder believes his best athletic days may lie ahead, and he's thinking about an Olympic medal.

But what about the 24 hammer throwers ahead of him?

"As far as the Olympics are concerned, maybe 12 in the top 20 are from Russia," he said. "Since you can only send three athletes in each event from one country, there's nine athletes right there that I don't have to compete against. That will make it easier for me."

What will make it harder is that Neilson now is a medical student at the University of British Columbia. At Washington, he was a chemistry major and earned a bachelor of science degree.

"There's a lot of memorization," he said, "and it's a lot more studying and time to put in, but I plan to concentrate on my weight lifting quite a bit during the school year.

"Hopefully, after my strength is up and after the school year is over, I can hit the throwing pretty hard and increase my technique quite a bit.

"So I hope to throw better next year than I did this year. Because I'm older and stronger now, I think at this stage as an athlete I can put in a lot less work and get a lot better results."

Neilson admits to being discouraged because his best throw is more than seven metres off the world record.

"Obviously," he said, smiling, "it is a little discouraging at times when you think you're really throwing well and you don't really have any idea of how you're going to improve. But I know I can improve on my technique, so I'm confident I can improve to the level of the people at the top."

In order to win a bronze medal at the Moscow Olympics in 1980, he figures he will have to improve his best throw by about three metres.

MISSES FIELD GOALS, GETS COACH'S VOTE

Roy can't kick - either way

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Roy Gerela just shakes his head. In his last six field goal attempts for San Diego Chargers, the once popular placekicker for Pittsburgh Steelers is an imperfect 0-for-6.

"I think as soon as I make one everything will be okay,' said Gerela, who once booted field goals in 18 straight National Football League games.

The fans in San Diego have hooted him loudly since he was picked up by the Chargers as a free agent. But Gerela got what appeared to be a vote of confidence Monday from a fan whose vote means something.

Coach Don Coryell told reporters after Gerela missed two field goal attempts in Sunday's 20-10 National Football League victory over Seattle: "We'll see if we can improve the situation, I mean improve Gerela."

After 11 years in the NFL, the native of Powell River arrived in San Diego for a tryout because of kicker Rolf Benirschke's illness. Benirschke has since undergone bowel surgery and is out for the season.

Gerela beat out the only other applicant for the kicking job after failing similar tryouts with Baltimore Colts and Buffalo Bills.

Things went all right in his first game with the Chargers. Gerela was perfect in four conversion attempts and kicked a field goal as San Diego whipped San Francisco '49ers.

But disaster followed. Gerela missed four field goal tries at Denver and the Broncos went on to beat San Diego by a score of 7-0 in what the Chargers regarded as their most important game in the American Conference West race. Sunday's performance against Seattle followed.

Gerela looked impressive in his tryout, and Coryell said he would be given special attention during drills. But, said Gerela: "I'm the only one who can do anything about it. . . . I know I'm hitting the ball well. I just can't pinpoint what I'm doing wrong."

Canada plans bid for Games

MOSCOW (Reuter) — Canada will apply to hold the 1988 Winter Olympic Games in the western part of the country, a member of the Canadian Olympic Association announced Tuesday.

James Worrall of Toronto told a news conference that the association would make a formal application by the beginning of November when it had decided in which city the Games would be held.

"The Canadian Olympic Association has received applications from Vancouver and Calgary for endorsement as official applications," he said.

Worral was speaking after a six-day tour by Canadian officials of the facilities for next year's Summer Olympics in Moscow. Montreal staged the 1976 Summer Games.

Worrall, a member of the International Olympic Committee who helped organize the Montreal Games and a candidate for the IOC presidency when Irish peer Lord Killanin retires, said that work on the Moscow sports sites was going well and described the Olympic village as "glamorous."

Honda cars 'full of defects' APA spokesman charges

MONTREAL (CP) — The Automobile Protection Association has advised the public not to buy Honda cars, alleging that they are full of mechanical defects that the company refuses to repair free of charge.

APA president Phil Edmonston says the consumer group has found evidence in a sheaf of internal Honda documents of a large number of unreported defects, as well as failure to inform owners that the company has a policy of making certain repairs and replacements for free.

Some of the defects could endanger lives, he alleged this week, citing brake deficiencies, loss of steering control, sudden stops and accelerations, engines that catch fire, cracks in the front axle and defective tires and lights.

A spokesman for the Honda company said it would issue a statement sometime today to respond to the charges.

There are about 175,000 Honda automobiles on the road in Canada.

Edmonston demanded that the federal transport department open an investigation, but transport official Gary Murray said Tuesday that there is nothing in the APA material, supplied by an ex-Honda employee, that indicates Hondas are unsafe.

Most of the APA's allegations concern Canadian Honda Motors Ltd.'s policy on free repairs of defective parts.

Edmonston said the internal documents, mostly directives to dealers, show that Honda lengthened certain engine and anti-rust guarantees without informing owners.

He demanded that Honda make public all its warranty extensions and reimburse owners who paid for repair or replacement of the parts involved.

In one case, Edmonston said, the company directed its dealers to replace cracked head gaskets on the engines of 1976 and 1977 CVCC models free of charge, but did not inform owners of the policy.

Honda has refused free replacement of the part since 1978, he charged.

The 1976 and 1977 CVCCs were ordered recalled by the United States Environmental Protection Agency because the faulty gaskets made them exceed emission standards.

Murray said the federal transport department tested the cars at that time but found they met Canadian emission standards even with a faulty gasket.

He said unlike the U.S. government, the Canadian government has no power to order a manufacturer to replace parts free. The Motor Vehicle Safety Act says a car maker aware of a safety defect must only notify the dealer, the car's current owner and the department of transport.

Murray said, however, federal standards exist for all automobile parts and all Honda models have passed their once-a-year departmental inspection.

He added the transport department ordered a recall of 1978 Honda Civics for failure to meet heater-defroster standards.

Murray said it was unlikely the department would re-examine the Hondas in the light of the APA allegations, because the five employees of the motor vehicle safety branch have other responsibilities.

Edmonston "has run us on a number of wild goose chases in the past," he added.

Other department spokesmen said there is concern with the fact that the master brake cylinder of the Civic can be activated by thrusting a foot into an area beneath the dashboard. However, no accidents have been attributed to the problem.

Honda spokesman Ross Davidson said the problem has been eliminated from 1980 Civics and the critical area on earlier models is protected by a bracket and wiring.

Tough choice faced Parrot

TORONTO (CP) — Postal union leader Jean-Claude Parrot had to choose between losing control of his members or delaying the order that they return to work after Parliament declared a postal strike illegal, the Ontario Court of Appeal was told Tuesday.

Parrot's lawyer told the court Parrot risked isolating himself from the membership of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers and "appearing to become a tool of the opposition in a highly-charged atmosphere" had he obeyed Parliament promptly.

Aubrey Golden argued that had Parrot lost the membership's support, getting the men back to work may have been a lot more difficult than it actually was.

But Douglas Rutherford, a federal government lawyer, said Parrot usurped the right of Parliament when he failed to comply with the legislation.

Rutherford argued that it was not up to the jury to decide whether theunion leader "was reasonable, correct, wise or prudent in delaying to give that notice until he thought best."

Rutherford said Chief Justice Gregory Evans, the trial judge, was correct in keeping the evidence down to the issue of whether Parrot complied with the law.

Whether Parliament was unwise in issuing the order or whether the order could have caused riots were not matters for the jury to decide, he said.

"The jury shouldn't decide if Parliament is less wise than Mr. Parrot."

Paul Cavaluzzo, a union lawyer appealing the conviction, said Parliament contravened the Canadian Bill of Rights by treating the postal workers more harshly than any other group of Canadians.

The postal union had been without a contract since June 30, 1977, when it called members out on a legal strike last Oct. 16. The back-to-work order took effect three days later, but most postal workers remained off the job until Parrot ordered an end to the strike Oct. 25.

Cattle slashers strike again

EDMONTON (CP) — Three more cattle mutilations were reported Tuesday near Fort Macleod and Rocky Mountain House, bringing the Alberta total to 22.

One of the victims was a calf barely 12 hours old, found dead near Rocky Mountain House.

Cpl. Lyn Lauber of the Calgary RCMP, the officer heading the investigation into cattle mutilations, said the calf was only alive a few hours before it was killed. The lips and throat were cut on the little Holstein but nothing else was disturbed.

"The mother wasn't bothered," said Lauber. "How they got at the calf without her, I don't know."

Sex organs have been removed in clean dissections in most instances.

Also near Rocky Mountain House, a seven-year-old Hereford cow was found with its teats, anus and vulva missing. It had been dead a day or more.

In the Fort Macleod area, a Hereford steer was found dead with its anus and tongue removed but its genitals intact. The mutilation was the second in the Fort Macleod area since the incidents began Aug. 13.

Lauber said the farmer who owned the steer checked his cattle Monday night and found no dead stock. The steer was found dead the next morning.

Canadian authors win top honors

MONTREAL (CP) — A Toronto physician's account of his struggle with cancer and a novel of a young Canadian army officer in the First World War were named Monday as best English-language Canadian paperbacks of 1979.

The selections were announced at the third annual Author's Awards dinner, sponsored by Periodical Distributors of Canada through its Foundation for the Advancement of Canadian Letters.

Timothy Findley collected his third literary prize for The Wars. He previously won the Governor-General's Award and the City of Toronto Book Award for his hardcover edition.

When Cancer Strikes, by the late John A. MacDonald, won first prize in the non-fiction category. Madeleine MacDonald accepted the award for her late husband, whose book was published shortly before his death this year.

Second prize for fiction went to Grahame Woods for Bloody Harvest, a novel of migrant tomato workers in southern Ontario.

Edgar Friedenberg won the major prize in the public affairs category for his April article in Saturday Night titled You Can Have Exactly As Much Freedom As The Government Allows. That's The Canadian Way.

Toronto advertising executive Jerry Goodis won second prize for a March article in Toronto Life, titled The Trivia Dealers, which was a criticism of Canadian political reporting.

Lawrence O'Toole won the best magazine humor award for The Long-Hair Papers in Toronto Life's August edition.

Awards for magazine fiction went to Rudy Wiebe for his short story After Thirty Years of Marriage (Canadian Forum, October, 1978) and to Jack Hodgins for The Concert Stages of Europe (Saturday Night, July, 1978).

U.S. acid rain culprit

OTTAWA (UPC) — The acid rain that falls on Canada from U.S. sources is so considerable that even if Canada shut down its own polluters, the problem would still not be resolved, Environment Minister John Fraser says.

"The government views the situation as the worst environmental situation that Canada has ever faced," the minister said Tuesday.

"Our experts tell us that if we close down every emission source in Canada we would be still receiving significant fallout from the United States," Fraser told reporters outside the House of Commons.

New Democrat Derek Blackburn said such firms as International Nickel Company in Sudbury, Ont. were the biggest source of toxic emissions and must increase standards.

"We could shut Inco down tomorrow but that won't resolve the problem," Fraser said.

A joint U.S.-Canada report Monday said there was "every indication" that acid rain — pollutants mixed with precipitation — was destroying not only North America's river system but crops and forests as well.

Fraser told reporters Tuesday that Canada and the United States may not reach agreement on how to resolve the serious problems of acid rain until after the 1980 U.S. presidential election.

"It's essential that the months from now till then are used effectively . . . to work out an agreement which will enable both countries to tackle the matter on both sides of the border," he said.

Blackburn said the acid rain problem has been known for some time and he demanded to know what immediate action the Conservative government would take.

Asked if Canada should stiffen pollution standards to conform to those in the United States, Fraser said "even with the standards that the Americans are applying today, they are still emitting very large quantities of sulphur and nitrous oxide.

"The Americans are not effectively combatting the problem now."

FIRA facing federal fire

OTTAWA (CP) — It cost taxpayers $3.7 million last year to keep 117 federal bureaucrats at work examining applications by foreigners to move into the business community.

They turned down 44 applications and allowed 617.

These figures are contained in the fifth annual report of the Foreign Investment Review Agency released Tuesday. The 120-page fact-filled booklet may well turn out to be the agency's last such report.

The Conservative government has announced plans for a full-scale review into FIRA, following complaints from foreign businessmen that scrutiny of their business plans by federal officials makes them hesitant to invest in Canada.

The agency subjected more than 650 foreign business proposals to its screening process last year. Half the applications — mainly those involving small stores and service outlets — were dealt with in 17 days.

The remainder, which involved several multi-million dollar merger bids such as the headline-grabbing attempt by Simpsons Sears Ltd. to take over Simpsons Ltd., took several months to review.

Foreign investors are not the only group seeking changes in the screening process. While they want looser regulations, there is a growing demand among some politicians and economists for a toughening of the review process.

MPs from all parties have ridiculed FIRA as a toothless agency, which throws open the country's doors to the vast majority of applicants. They say the agency offers Canada little serious protection from the threat of further foreign economic domination.

Although its detractors point to the small number of bids rejected each year as evidence that FIRA lacks clout, the agency says its real usefulness lies in convincing foreigners to submit applications favorable to Canadian development.

"The review process has provided an opportunity in many cases for the agency to suggest changes in the investor's plans that would either remove conflicts with Canadian objectives or lead to an investment that can make a more positive contribution to those objectives," the report says.

But FIRA admits it is often difficult to tell whether an investment will turn out to be beneficial.

Manitoba keeps status quo

WINNIPEG (CP) — "The status quo has been maintained in Manitoba," said Premier Sterling Lyon Tuesday, summing up the results of three provincial byelections.

Conservative Gary Filmon was elected in River Heights constituency, Liberal June Westbury took Fort Rouge and NDP candidate Vic Schroeder won the Rossmere seat.

All the ridings were in the Winnipeg area and each elected a candidate belonging to the same party that took the seats in the 1977 provincial election.

The byelections leave standings in the 57-seat legislature at Conservatives 33, NDP 23 and Liberals one.

In Fort Rouge and River Heights, byelections were needed to fill seats emptied when Liberal Lloyd Axworthy and Conservative Sidney Spivak resigned to fight for a seat in the May 22 federal election, which Axworthy won.

Two of Tuesday's contests were fairly close.

In Axworthy's former seat of Fort Rouge, Ms. Westbury defeated NDP candidate Vic Savino by about 400 votes, while in Rossmere Schroeder defeated Conservative Harold Piercy by less than 150 votes.

In River Heights however, Filmon won comfortably with a thousand-vote margin over Liberal runner-up Jay Prober.

Grits ease Commons attack

OTTAWA (CP) — The Liberals have decided against moving another motion of no confidence in the government at this time.

Allan MacEachen, Liberal leader in the Commons said Tuesday night that the party considered moving such a motion in the Commons and then rejected the idea.

Opposition Leader Pierre Trudeau said Monday night after the defeat of a Liberal non-confidence motion that another would be moved Tuesday.

"Watch us," he told reporters after the defeat of the motion that condemned the Conservative government for its plans for Petro-Canada.

The vote then was 137 to 128.

MacEachen said the party considered moving a motion condemning the government for some other aspect of the speech from the throne read at the opening of Parliament last week.

That would have been voted upon this afternoon.

MacEachen said the Liberals decided they did not want another round of voting at this time.

He said the New Democrats probably would have copied the Liberals with their motion. An NDP motion condemning the government on Petro-Canada was defeated easily last Thursday when the Social Credit and Liberals supported the government.

The debate on the speech from the throne continues until Friday. At that time the Commons, without a formal vote will pass a government motion thanking Gov.-Gen. Ed Schreyer for reading the speech which outlined government legislation for the first session of the 31st Parliament.

MacEachen said the nine-vote margin in Monday's vote was narrow.

"What do you want, a margin of 1½ votes?" he joked.

But experts have said for some time that it is unlikely that the Conservative government elected May 22 will be defeated in the Commons for more than a year.

The Liberals have said that the Conservatives will be given a chance to govern.

And MacEachen himself has said that if the government is defeated, it will be its own will.

The five-man Social Credit group supported the government Monday night while the New Democrats supported the Liberals. There were 10 Liberals absent, four of them paired with four absent Tories.

A Liberal spokesman rejected arguments that some members were purposely absent so that there was no danger of a government defeat.

He said Trudeau wanted all Liberals in to vote, even if that meant defeating the government.

Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre), New Democrat House leader, said later his party also has decided not to move another vote.

"It's not much use saying you are going to give the Tories a chance to govern and then keep trying to pull them down."

Wage subsidies urged

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government should direct part of the $2.2 billion it now spends on unemployment insurance benefits to subsidize the wages of workers turning out new products, Progressive Conservative MP George Hees said Tuesday.

Hees made the suggestion as part of a five-point plan to stimulate the sluggish Canadian economy, create jobs and begin reducing Canada's $11 billion budget deficit.

Speaking during the throne speech debate in the Commons, the MP for the Ontario riding of Northumberland and a former trade minister, said incentives must be offered to Canadian companies that will enable them to introduce new Canadian-made products at prices competitive with imports.

He argued Canadian companies now are unable to compete for much business because of low labor costs in Japan, Hong Kong, Taiwan, Korea and elsewhere.

Federal wage subsidies should be paid for two years after a company started a new line of production, he said.

And during that period the company should be allowed to write off the cost of all machinery necessary to produce the item.

The MP also suggested incentives to increase productivity, such as allowing firms to write off capital expenditures for new plants and machinery.

On-job training

The provincial government will spend $750,000 to train young people for jobs in the forest industry, Labor Minister Allan Williams said Tuesday.

He said the program is aimed at easing unemployment by providing young men and women with practical experience that would improve their chances of finding full-time employment.

It also would increase the number of skilled and semi-skilled workers available to the forest industry, he said in a news release.

Forests Minister Tom Waterland said up to 100 men and women from between the ages of 15 and 24 will be given on-the-job training for a maximum five-month period begining this week. The salary of each trainee will be $1,158 a month.

We'd like to talk to you about Canada Savings Bonds

Here's why:

There are bonuses on CSB'S that DO NOT show anywhere on the bonds. You can lose money if you are not careful. Our trained staff have prepared summaries of various series of CSB's to help you avoid confusion.

See our trained staff now if you hold or are considering purchasing more CSB's. Later, during the peak period there is less time available for counselling.

You may pre process your new bond purchases now, and arrange to have your bonuses paid automatically on November 1st. Just bring your bonds in and talk to one of our Deposit Managers.

In 1974 the federal Government increased the yield on a total of 13 series of Canada Savings Bonds. This was done to have them all yield 9% from May 1, 1974 to August 31, 1974 and 10½% from September 1, 1974 to maturity, thus preventing the extra administration of "rolling over" old bonds for new.

The Centennial Series which matures November 1st this year has a cash bonus of $30.75 per $100.00. In other words a thousand dollar Centennial Bond will pay $307.50 more than the coupons show and nowhere does this show on the bond. Series S22, S23, S25, S26, S27, S28 also have bonuses to be paid November 1st.

This year is a good year to review your Canada Savings Bonds, but as you can see there is the potential for confusion.

Our deposit managers and their staff will be happy to counsel you personally to ensure you are comfortable with your decisions. Our staff will also pre process your transactions, but come in now because there is less time available for counselling during the peak times.

Royal ranch now on view

EP RANCH, Alta. (CP) — Before Edward VIII was captivated by Wallis Simpson, he fell in love with a piece of rolling country in the Alberta foothills where he bought a ranch.

The ranch, about 110 kilometres southwest of Calgary, was his for 42 years before he sold it to a local family named Cartwright. The Cartwrights keep it open for visitors who come by to this day to see the ranch once owned by a king.

The story began when Edward, then the dashing young Prince of Wales, visited the Bar U Ranch owned by George Lane, one of the founders of the Calgary Stampede.

The prince walked over a ridge, saw one of the prettiest valleys in the foothills and decided to get into the ranching business.

Lane set up the deal with the owners and the prince took title to the grassland along Pekisko Creek in 1919. He imported some of the best stock in Britain and branded it with an EP, for Edward, Prince.

The business end was left to a manager and the prince kept the ranch mainly as a sportsman's retreat. On infrequent visits, he went out riding and hunting with Lane and other local ranchers.

The prince was a great horseman who would often drop in unannounced on neighbors to discuss ranch business, recalls Charles Clark, former owner-publisher of the High River Times and father of Prime Minister Clark.

"When he came, he shed the pomp and cremony and enjoyed getting away from it . . . and the community allowed him to do so," says Clark.

There was no forgetting Edward's royal status, however, as the prince learned on one visit.

Clark said that the prince was touring High River one day with Guy Weadick, another of the founders of the Stampede. They entered the town library and "surprised all the ladies down on their hands and knees scrubbing the floor in preparation for the informal royal visit."

The prince was king for only a few months, giving up his throne in 1936 to marry twice-divorced Mrs. Simpson.

The couple became the Duke and Duchess of Windsor and made a well-publicized trip to the ranch in 1941. The duchess was reported to be less than impressed with the rustic charms of riding over open grassland and watching mountain sheep.

When the duke sold the ranch, he did so from Paris.

Final search for boy fails

EDMONTON (CP) — A final RCMP search for a nine-year-old boy missing in Elk Island National Park since June 29 has failed. Kevin Reimer wandered away from his family's campsite at the park east of Edmonton wearing only sneakers and shorts. More than 2,000 volunteers, RCMP officers, Canadian Forces personnel and minimum security prisoners from the Fort Saskatchewan Institution participated in initial searches this summer.

New noodle plant

MOSSBANK, Sask. (CP) — A processing plant producing the first Canadian-made Oriental-style noodles has opened in this small farming community 60 kilometres south of Moose Jaw. The noddle plant, built and equipped at a cost of $1 million, is owned by Mossbank Foods Ltd., a public company formed by some 280 local residents in partnership with Armour Foods (Canadian) Ltd. of Mississauga, Ont. and F2PT, a Calgary consulting firm. Armour has a 50-per-cent interest and F2PT a four-per-cent interest in the company.

Balloon deficit

GRANDE PRAIRIE (CP) — The Grande Prairie Chamber of Commerce ran up a deficit of $17,900 in the first Canadian national hot air balloon championship last summer in the city. But despite the loss the chamber voted in favor of Grande Prairie playing host to the annual event in the future. The total budget for staging the event July 29-Aug. 6 was $82,700. Original budget estimates set the cost at $45,380.

Closure queried

WINNIPEG (CP) — Dick Martin, president of the Manitoba Federation of Labor, says an inquiry should be held into the planned closure of the Swift Canadian Co. Ltd. plant in the St. Boniface area of Winnipeg. Martin told a news conference the company has not released any figures to indicate whether the plant is actually losing money, or whether it is simply more profitable for Swift to carry on operations elsewhere.

$1,000 fine

WINNIPEG (CP) — Walter Tycholis, 46, who accidentally killed a hunting partner, has been fined $1,000 in court for careless use of a firearm. The incident occurred when Tycholis, of the Poplarfield area of Manitoba, was hunting last November with Peter Mateychuk. Tycholis testified he was taking target practice when he fired the shot through the brush that accidentally hit Mateychuk in the throat. The men, who were related by marriage, had hunted together for 13 years.

Farming beats frustrations

United Press Canada

Another day, another dollar.

You missed your bus. The elevator jammed. The phones weren't working — and when they did everybody was out, and nobody returned your calls. You missed an appointment because of another extended "business lunch." Your waterbed sprang a leak and ruined your exercise bicycle.

Is that your trouble, Bunky? Is the Big City getting you down?

farming report
by leo quigley

Then you may be just the person the Rainy River District is looking for — they need farmers. In fact, they want farmers so badly they've sent out a press release inviting people to put down roots in some of Canada's most picturesque real estate.

"There is an abundance of relatively cheap land available," the release said. "What the area needs is people."

The Rainy River District, located in the extreme western tip of Ontario, isn't he only area of Canada with cheap land and few people. But there's something appealing about the invitation. It came in the mail on a single mimeographed page entitled, "Wanted — Farmers."

No press reception. No glossy promotion. No real estate company offering free trips. No government red tape attached.

It's refreshing — just about as refreshing as the Rainy River District itself, nestled next to Lake of the Woods with the State of Minnesota to the south and Manitoba to the west. A landscape of crystal lakes dotted with islands.

A perfect spot for someone who isn't prepared to face the hardships of homesteading in Canada's north — with 289,961 acres of potential farmland waiting for the plow.

Cleared land sells for about $175 an acre, which is a bargain at today's prices. Uncleared land sells at about $50 an acre, and you could expect to spend $60 an acre to remove the trees. The total cost of clearing the land and working it down for a crop might reach $135 an acre, depending on how much of your own "free" labor you put into it.

Or, you could buy an established farm. Asking prices run from $200,000 for 600 cleared acres with an additional 70 acres of brushland and a good house and barns, to $83,000 for 200 cleared acres with an additional 100 acres uncleared and a modest house and buildings.

Most farms in the Rainy River district raise cattle, both beef and dairy. Calves are nomally sold at the annual sale in Stratton. Fat cattle are sold at Winnipeg or through a local slaughter house.

With the emphasis on cattle most crops are designed for forage, but the Rainy River area is also suited to growing feed corn, barley, oats, rapeseed, flax and spring wheat.

But best of all, there's no transit buses to catch, no elevators to fight for, and business lunches consist of a hamburger, pie and coffee.

You could be your own boss in Rainy River.

Versatile Winnipeg could be any place

By HEATHER FRAYNE

WINNIPEG (CP) — The magic of motion pictures has transformed part of downtown Winnipeg into Depression-era Calgary.

"Winnipeg is the only city versatile enough to be any place," Michael MacDonald said, at the beginning of a week's location work on the feature film, Silence of the North.

"Everybody else has ripped down their buildings; they have no history left," said MacDonald, unit manager for the project.

Based on the diary of 78-year-old Olive Frederickson, the film tells the story of a family's struggle for survival in Calgary and northern Alberta from 1919 to the 1930s.

To recreate the atmosphere of the later years, period billboards have gone up, while modern signs, lamp posts, fire hydrants, and aluminum-framed windows have been removed.

A few buildings have been renamed, and six truckloads of sand have been dumped to disguise the interlocking stone sidewalks and paved streets in part of the city's east end.

Producer Bob Baylis says the film, the first by Universal Productions Canada Inc., could mark the beginning of an important secondary industry for Winnipeg.

But Baylis and director Allan King say Manitoba can make itself much more attractive to the film industry by following the lead of other provinces and opening an advisory office to co-ordinate the activities of film production companies.

Both men have been pleased with the co-operation of the Manitoba departments of culture and public works, Manitoba Hydro, Winnipeg police, and the office of Winnipeg mayor Bill Norrie.

"They've really been putting out for us and I think that's super," Baylis said. "But it would be nice if the province had one simple unit to advise on what's available in Manitoba.

"North Carolina, Texas, Alberta — you name it — put out little press kits telling what's available in the way of historic sites and so on. They might even lay on an aircraft or a driver and a car for location searches."

Baylis estimated the production team for Silence of the North — wardrobe, lighting, camera, and special effects workers — "will probably end up spending a half a million dollars here in a very short period of time."

"That doesn't represent a lot of money but if you get 10 productions going in a year, well that is a lot of money," he added.

King said film advisory offices in Alberta and British Columbia have helped to make those provinces well-known in the industry.

"The federal government has been very helpful but it can't direct film production to a particular province," he said.

"I think there's a role for each province to see that the background traditions indigenous to its life get filmed."

King said each province except Saskatchewan and Alberta "claims an educational and cultural role, but leaves it to the federal government to take any action. It's lazy and short-sighted as far as I can see."

Bryan Gliserman, the film's supervisor of extras, says unlike other locations, he has found a wealth of acting talent here. Many of the extras are members of the Association of Canadian Radio and Television Actors.

"But many aren't. The thing is almost all of them are experienced," Gliserman said.

At 86, Bill Seller may be the oldest of the walk-on players.

"Ordinarily I wouldn't have taken just a bit part but I've been out of acting work for six years. I took it because I'm just breaking back into it again."

Trades exodus

WINNIPEG (CP) — An exodus of skilled trademen has left Manitoba's construction industry short-handed, says the vice-president of the Winnipeg Construction Association. Gerwin Greasley said that at least 100 skilled workers are needed to meet a shortage of sheet metal workers, plasterers, carpenters and painters. He estimated that 2,000 workers have left the province.

Clark rejects protest over U.S. tanker route

OTTAWA (UPC) — Prime Minister Joe Clark has rejected suggestions he protest to U.S. President Jimmy Carter the recommendation made earlier this week by U.S. Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus that the president choose an all-American plan using tankers to transport oil from Alaska.

Opposition MPs Tuesday charged the government's lack of strong support for the Foothills Oil Pipeline Ltd. plan to build an all-Canadian pipeline was the reason the company pulled out of the project a few hours after Andrus' recommendation became public.

Reacting to Foothills' shelving — at least temporarily — of its proposal to construct the $1.6 billion pipeline along the Alaska Highway from Fairbanks to Edmonton, opposition spokesmen accused the government of backtracking on its previously stated opposition to tankers carrying oil along Canada's vulnerable west coast fishing banks.

The prime minister rejected the demand by New Democratic MP Jim Fulton that the government "send a strong diplomatic protest to the United States," opposing west coast tanker traffic.

But Clark, who is due to hold talks with the U.S. president in Ottawa Nov. 9 and 10, said he would be sending "at the earliest possible time, another communication to the United States on the question of the pipeline route."

Liberal leader Pierre Trudeau charged Clark now supported the American proposal to ship oil by tanker to a port on Washington state's Puget Sound, then by pipeline to St. Paul, Minn.

Clark denied the allegation.

Trudeau also demanded Clark produce documents detailing the results of government meetings with Foothills executives, and the contents of a Sept. 28 position paper sent to the U.S. supporting the all-Canadian route.

Clark didn't produce the documents.

Other opposition members also jumped on the government.

"It's quite clear that their fiddling around on this issue has probably blown the chance of getting the Foothills pipeline built," Liberal MP Art Phillips told reporters later. "I certainly blame the Clark government for their lack of wholehearted, strong support for the Foothills proposal, over the last five months." The Vancouver MP said it was a "remarkable coincidence" that Environment Minister John Fraser last week said he found some merit to the idea of tankers steaming down the west coast.

"Bang, the next business day Monday, the Foothills proposal is withdrawn," Phillips said.

In Vancouver Tuesday, Trans Mountain Pipe Line Ltd., told the National Energy Board it could have a superport at Low Point, Wash., and a pipeline to Edmonton in operation by early 1983.

Operator lockout illegal?

The Public Service Alliance of Canada says the federal government is illegally locking out radio operators across the country and posing a threat to the safety of the travelling public.

The group's statement, which said the alliance is filing charges with the public service staff relations board, came on the first day of a strike by 1,167 operators, members of the Union of Canadian Transport Employees.

A spokesman for Transport Canada in Ottawa said 102 out of 116 airports were struck, but that 609 operators designated to carry out emergency duties were on hand and that so far, the strike has had little effect.

"Some delays may be expected as the strike continues but we are aware of none today," said the spokesman.

The 1,167 operators have been without a contract since July, 1978, and are seeking a new two-year agreement that would give them a 15-per-cent wage hike.

Duties of the operators include providing navigational help, weather information and flight planning services at the airports as well as handling ship-to-shore communications at 26 marine stations operated by the coast guard.

The operators' union is part of the alliance, which is backing the union in its strike.

"Despite the fact they are in a legal position to strike, operators are making every attempt to continue to perform services that are essential to the safety and security of the public," alliance president Andy Stewart said.

He said that in sending home employees wishing to complete designated duties, the government is violating the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

The operators currently earn $13,328 to $15,500 a year. In September they turned down a conciliation board offer of an eight-per-cent increase. Union spokesmen have said the strike is an attempt to bring the treasury board back to the bargaining table.

On Tuesday, no flight cancellations were reported. Transport Canada said air traffic controllers were handling operators' duties at large airports, but that smaller airports might have experienced some delays.

U.K. rail strike called

By BRUCE LEVETT

LONDON (CP) — In a move which may presage a return of last winter's labor unrest, British railwaymen have called a walkout which could paralyse this city of seven million for two days.

Barring an 11th-hour reprieve, all stations and rail routes serving the capital face complete shutdown today.

In general, it is being regarded as an unpopular strike and one The Evening News calls "irresponsible . . . unnecessary . . . and with the public the helpless victims."

The strike was announced just as Len Murray, a top official of the Trade Unons Congress, was making an appeal for a winter of restraint in labor relations.

Unions, management and government must co-operate if British industry and the economy are to be salvaged, he said.

Pay is not the central issue in the strike called by the National Union of Railwaymen.

The union executive called the walkout over proposals by state-owned British Rail to reduce the number of men in the parcel department of Paddington Station to 120 from 176, transferring the remaining 56 to other duties.

The railway and the union are accusing each other of bypassing traditional bargaining procedures. British Rail wants the dispute to go to arbitration, but the union insists the parcel clerks go back to their original jobs and shifts before arbitration begins.

When deadlock became apparent, the union called a 24-hour strike affecting 15,000 railwaymen and tying up all train services to London.

An estimated 450,000 commuters are expected to be affected.

Pakistan clamps tighten

ISLAMABAD (AP) — President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq's forces arrested opposition leaders all over Pakistan early today after the military strongman cancelled elections and froze all political activity.

Among those arrested were Begum Nusrat Bhutto and Benazir Bhutto of the Pakistan People's Party. They are the wife and daughter of hanged former prime minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto.

Official sources said in addition to heads of most of the parties, a number of other leaders, including deputy party chiefs, were put under detention.

Most of the leaders were arrested in Lahore, Rawalpindi and Karachi and put under detention in their own houses. The arrest orders provided for a three-month detention.

In addition to the arrests, the offices of all the parties, including their branches in various cities, were sealed by the government.

"Martial law hereafter will be what martial law should be," Zia declared Tuesday in announcing the Nov. 17 general elections were postponed indefinitely.

He said magazines and newspapers he accused of "poisoning and polluting" the atmosphere were closed, and that violators of press censorship would be subject to jail terms up to 10 years, fines and flogging.

"No one can be allowed to destroy the country in the name of democracy nor will violence be permitted in the name of politics," he said, plunging the country back under the administration of military strongmen that Pakistan has had for 14½ of the past 21 years.

There was speculation Zia cancelled the elections for fear voters would support the daughter of Bhutto, the prime minister Zia ousted in a coup in July, 1977. Bhutto was hanged in April on conviction of plotting the murder of a political foe.

Zia first set elections for October of 1977, then cancelled them on grounds the country wasn't ready for them. He rescheduled them for next month.

FIGHTER JAILED

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Former Mexican light heavyweight boxing champion Amado Vasquez has been sentenced to 90 days in jail for hitting and killing a man with his car.

Retarded classes for blacks illegal

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Intelligence tests that lead to the placement of an unusually large number of black children in classes for the mentally retarded have been ruled unconstitutional by a U.S. federal judge.

Chief U.S. District Judge Robert F. Peckham, ruling in a suit filed in 1971 on behalf of five black youngsters, said Tuesday the use of standardized IQ tests in California to place students in the special classes violated recently enacted federal laws and state and federal constitutions.

The judge said evidence showed IQ tests were developed on white populations and not adjusted or even reexamined when it became clear that certain groups — notably blacks and Hispanics — received low scores.

Peckham ruled in 1972 against such placements and Tuesday's decision ordered the ban be continued.

SWEET CHARITY, disco-style, produced tired feet for (left to right) Donna Gibbs, 20, Barb Logan, 19, Linda Wiltermuth, 23, and Shelly Newton, 21. But the four made it through 24 hours of marathon dancing at Oly's disco lounge on Johnson that began at 11 p.m. Monday in a bid to raise money for the B.C. Lions Society for Crippled Children. Seven dancers started but three dropped out and an Oly's employee estimated honored pledges should top $600. The four survivors, who were allowed 10-minute breaks each hour with a half-hour off for meals, won about $300 in prize money and will either split it up or chip it in with the other pledges. Baby unlikely to be retarded, inquest told

An infant boy who died 10 hours after being born to a severely retarded woman would likely have been mentally normal if he had lived, a coroner's jury was told Tuesday.

Dr. Patricia Baird, a clinical medical geneticist from Vancouver, said the chances of the boy being as severely retarded as his mother were less than one per cent.

She said there was only a 10 or 15 per cent chance the child would have been even mildly retarded if its father, who is not known, was retarded.

Baird's testimony was in sharp contrast to evidence given earlier in the day by Dr. Selma Styles, staff geneticist at Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Styles said the maximum risk of the baby being retarded was in the order of 45 per cent.

The inquest, which entered its eighth day today, was ordered by B.C.'s chief coroner, Dr. William McArthur, after the unusual circumstances of the baby's death came to light last May.

The baby was born by caesarian section in Victoria General Hospital on Sept. 18, 1978, in its 23rd week of gestation. Its mother was a 32-year-old severely retarded patient at Glendale Lodge.

The pregnancy wasn't discovered until the baby's 20th week of gestation.

Evidence given so far has revealed doctors went ahead with the delivery even though they realized the chances of the baby's surviving were slim.

Testimony has also shown the decision was based partly on concern for the mother's emotional well-being and partly on fears the baby would be subnormal.

Baird, one of Canada's foremost medical geneticists, said that while neither the father of the child nor cause of the mother's mental retardation are known, certain assumptions can be made about the case and the likelihood of the baby being normal.

She said the vast majority of cases involving severe retardation are caused by pathological factors or external influences, such as viruses, chemicals or drugs like alcohol that somehow affect or change the normal development of brain cells in the fetus.

But those factors do not interfere with the polygenetic system or chromosomal mix which relays intelligence from parents to offspring.

She said 95 per cent of all offspring have an intelligence quotient within 10 points of the mean of both their parents.

Thus, she said, bright parents normally have bright children and dull parents have dull children.

But that only works to IQ levels above 50, she said. Below that level, other factors come into play. The reason geneticists believe this to be so, she said, is that the IQ curve for the population as a whole has an anomolous bubble at the very low end. The number of severely retarded persons is about 20 times greater than what might be expected. Geneticists believe the anomaly is due to pathological factors that influence the brain's development.

Baird noted that in the case before the jury the mother's family had no record of mental retardation over a four-generation period.

She described the family as "a very nice, very good family, quite prolific and with average or above-average intelligence."

She said none of the offspring had been suspected of even being borderline mentally, let alone dull.

Because of that, she said, it is reasonable to assume the mother's retardation was pathological in origin.

Quoting from several research studies, she said the recurrence risk of severe mental retardation in like cases is from 2.7 per cent to 5.6 per cent.

Baird acknowledged there was a chance the mother's retardation could have been caused by a recessive gene but that would be unlikely because there was no indication of such an gene being present in her parent's history.

She said the fact the father of the child is unknown makes it difficult to give a risk figure. If the father was of normal intelligence the baby's chance of being subnormal would be no different from the chance of that happening to anyone — well under one per cent, she said. If the father was polygenetically retarded the chances of retardation in the infant would increase to 10 to 15 per cent. And if both father and mother were retarded for polygenetic reasons the chances of the baby being also retarded would shoot up to 30 or 40 per cent.

Earlier in the day Styles said she was asked by Dr. John Kenneth Martin, director of medicine at Glendale, to carry out tests on the chromosomes of the mother 10 days before the operation to terminate the pregnancy was performed.

She said she found nothing unusual, that the genes were normal, but that an examination of handprints and footprints supported evidence to indicate the mother's retardation had its onset very early in her fetal development.

She said the retardation was uncharacterized, its cause unknown.

She said she examined tissues from the baby, after it was born, and also found no sign of abnormality.

Styles said that based on population studies, the chances of a normal baby being produced by two retarded parents was about 55 per cent.

She said the chances diminish to 52 to 46 per cent if the parents are severely retarded.

But Baird said it is dangerous to come to such conclusions using general population figures. She said the studies failed to separate pathological causes from polygenetic ones and because of that the statistics were unreliable.

The jury also heard testimony from Hubert Francis Hayes, Glendale administrator.

Hayes, calling the lodge "a glorified group home," said he has no authority to confine patients. They are admitted for treatment and care, not committed, he said.

Because of that, he said, the extent of his responsibility over the patients is in a grey area.

Under questioning by lawyer Chris Randall, public trustee representing the interests of the dead boy, Hayes said he lacks direction from the government on just what his powers are.

He agreed with Randall that he often is obliged to "stretch my idea of what the law allows."

Only one more witness was to be called this morning and McArthur was expected to deliver his charge to the jury this afternoon.

Heritage group holds four-day meeting here

More than 400 delegates are expected in Victoria this week for the annual general meeting of Heritage Canada, the first time the federal conservation agency has ever met outside Ottawa.

The Hallmark Society is acting as official host for the convention, which brings together technical experts, academics, architects and restoration buffs for four days.

Even someone from the Walt Disney Corp. is coming to speak during a day-long session on Saturday on the recreated 19th century Main Street which is part of its two amusement parks in California and Florida.

Other topics in this "Main Street Experience" workshop will include various success stories in Britain and U.S. midwestern towns and development of urban cores in Canadian cities.

Canadian authors Pierre Berton and W.O. Mitchell will be at the convention, Berton as chairman of Heritage Canada's board of governors. Mitchell, the prairie-born novelist and playwright (Who Has Seen the Wind, Jake and the Kid), delivers the keynote speech at the annual awards dinner Friday night.

Victoria was chosen for this first foray out of the national capital "because of its fine record of heritage preservation," according to the Hallmark Society.

"Victoria provides an ideal setting with a mixture of old and new, urban and rural, young and not so young," said Heritage Canada in its publicity.

"Highly Canadian and proud of her Pacific Northwest heritage, weathered totems and Indian culture, there is no other city in Canada which can smugly boast of green lawns in December and a Mediterranean climate.

"Once a fur trade post and booming gold rush town, it has a boisterous past, which still lives in the restored squares and transformed alleys of its 'Olde Town.' There is definitely English charm and character in castled estates and the Tudor-style homes which grace the tree-lined streets of surrounding hills."

Technical workshops on solving specific heritage restoration problems will be held and there will also be a guided tour of Chinatown on Sunday and a day trip to see Vancouver's Gastown on Thursday.

The Hallmark Society said special one-day registration for members of the public interested in specific subjects are available at $20, half-price for students. Call Jay Coulter of Heritage Canada at 592-2942.

Leaves worthwhile for balcony owners

Balcony gardeners have as much need for fallen leaves as do the down-to-earth gardeners. And in many instances the leaves are as available to the high-risers as they are to the ground level people.

If you have a balcony with tubs or planters for summer growing a few fresh vegetables and bright flowering annuals, you can enrich the soil during winter with a paper bag or two of gathered leaves.

There may be deciduous (leaf-losing) trees on the property. In this case you can speak to the building manager or the gardener, if there is one. It is more comfortable to have permission than to be questioned while gathering and told that all leaves must be left for use in the upkeep of the property plantings. Well, your balcony garden is part of the property.

Leaves on boulevard allowances and sidewalks from municipally planted trees can no doubt be gathered by residents adjacent to the boulevard. In fact, this was the common practice in Victoria city a few years back. Householders gathered the leaves each day as they fell, keeping the boulevard grass bright and sidewalks safe in wet weather.

Dry leaves are useful as a protection over spring bulbs planted in balcony containers.

As there is likely to be a roof overhead and side protection from rain the leaves will remain dry. Heaped loosely over daffodil or tulip bulbs when a cold spell is forecast, the dry leaves will act as insulation from low temperature and from a freezing wind if that should be part of the weather picture.

A piece of old cotton or wool material tied over the top of the container to prevent leaves from taking off ensures they will be on hand again for later use.

Cold spell over, the leaves are stuffed back into the paper bags and stored in the back dry corner of the balcony.

The containers will need occasional watering during mild spells because bulb roots will be increasingly active as time passes. The tips of daffodil and other narcissus bulbs will be showing above soil usually at some time during the first half of December.

Don't be tempted to put plastic covers over growing bulbs or other plants. Heat generated while making growth will be trapped by the plastic, causing rot to develop on the young shoots. They must have air, and that is why a covering of loose, dry leaves is useful.

Empty planters and tubs can have the soil renewed by putting a half container of dry leaves in layers with the old soil in each container. Dampen well; stir after every week or two.

Tea leaves and coffee grounds can be added to increase the amount of humus in the soil. Stir these in to cover with the soil.

To make leafmould for top-dressing permanent balcony shrubs or for re-potting indoor potted plants, keep leaves during winter in a plastic pail or an empty planter, layered with sprinklings of used summer soil from your own planters or from a friend's ground level garden. Dampen as you make the layers.

Keep the pail in the warmest corner of the balcony and in the sun during the hours across noon if this is possible on your balcony. Cover the top with brown paper to keep light out but to become warm and remain warm for several hours after the sunlight leaves the balcony.

Remember to stir the mixture occasionally. In early spring, empty contents of pail on to a sheet of paper and rub the rotting leaves through the hands to make a fine leafmould for the new season's use.

Balcony gardeners need not feel left out of the annual pleasure of harvesting fallen leaves.

Housing shortage 'critical'

One of the most important tasks facing the Victoria branch of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada is alerting people to the critical housing shortage here, says newly-elected president Alan MacGillivray.

He has told members the association must rebut the myth that builders are uncaring people whose only interest is profit.

"We are people working for people but we cannot do an effective job of providing houses without the support of government and the community at large," he said.

MacGillivray succeeded Bruce Davenport as president.

The 81-year-old Miss Guggenheim, the renowned art collector and self-described "bad girl" of the 1920s, said the book, Out of This Century: Confessions of an Art Addict, was a reworking of two previous autobiographical volumes, with added material.

"It was at last possible, in the new volume, to give the actual names of all my lovers, all except one, anyway," Miss Guggenheim said. "The truth can't hurt any of the poor dears now because they're all dead. Samuel Beckett is mentioned prominently, you know. But I really don't think I still shock anyone."

Former Beatle John Lennon and his wife, Yoko Ono, have joined the campaign to outfit the New York police with bulletproof vests. abby

Dear Abby:

The other evening I saw an outstanding ballet company perform. At the end, the audience responded with enthusiastic applause, but as the dancers took their first curtain call a large percentage of the audience rushed out of the theater, no doubt hurrying to get to their cars first.

These people were not only being rude to the performers but to others in the audience by obstructing their view of the stage.

The curtain call is important to performers. It's the only opportunity we have to step out of our roles and express our gratitude to an audience that rewards us with their applause.

Actress

Dear Actress:

Take another bow for a beautiful letter on behalf of all performers.

Dear Abby:

My wife has this long-time girlfriend I'll call Muriel. She's my wife's age (30), divorced, fairly attractive, but doesn't have a steady man. Muriel fancies herself to be some kind of femme fatale and has given me the come-on several times, but I've never given her any encouragement.

A couple of months ago, after I had taken my wife and Muriel to a disco, my wife told me that Muriel told her that I had made a pass at her! That was a total lie, and I told my wife it was.

Last weekend we were at a party and Muriel was there. I was very cool to her, and hardly spoke, but the next evening, my wife told me Muriel had called her at work and said that I had propositioned her! How should I handle this?

Not Guilty

Dear Not:

Ask your wife to invite Muriel over. In the presence of both you and your wife confront her about her accusations. If your wife is really a good friend, she will encourage Muriel to get professional help. The poor girl could be less malicious than disturbed.

Dear Abby:

Bravo to your response to the 82-year-old man who wants to marry a woman 20 years his junior! May I add:

I am 34, beautiful, well-educated and popular. I've had wealthy, young professional men beg me to marry them. I turned them all down because I am deeply in love with a 70-year-old man who has never given a material gift to me in the two years we've been caring for each other. What he has given me is an incomparable inner joy I've never felt with anyone else. He's so alive, warm and loving.

I love him, I want him, and I'd marry him tomorrow. So, to all those men up in age and reluctant to marry a younger woman, I say, 'I'd rather be an old man's darling than a young man's slave.'

Mme. Benoit in Victoria on microwave promotion tour

Look to quick cook

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY

The much-maligned microwave oven really is the wonder appliance of the future, according to Madame Jehane Benoit, famous chef and Canadian television cooking show hostess.

The kitchen gadget harnesses microwaves to produce heat and is convenient, clean, energy efficient and flavor enhancing, Madame Benoit said yesterday after a full day of microwave promotional activities in Victoria.

In fact Benoit, who has owned a microwave for eight years, predicts in 10 or 15 years the ovens will be as popular as the dishwasher and found in almost every home.

The Montreal-based cooking expert believes in microwaves so much she consented when Panasonic asked her recently to put on a cooking demonstration at The Bay in Victoria.

Current fears about the adverse effects of radiation are nonsense and based on misconception, Benoit and Panasonic marketing supervisor R.B. Ireland said during an interview.

"They're confusing microwaves with x-ray waves," Ireland explained.

Radiation used to take x-rays is an ionization process that strips atoms from cells. It is not heat-producing and powerful or prolonged exposure can be dangerous.

The microwave oven, like electric light, television and radio, is a harmless source of nonionizing radiation people come in contact with every day, Ireland said.

"Any time you have energy you have radiation — to suggest radiation is harmful is incorrect."

Ireland said a device called a magnitron is the heart of the oven. The magnitron functions like a radio antenna to broadcast a microwave similar to a radio wave. The microwave activity causes violent movement in the water molecules contained in food and that friction in turn produces heat.

Appreciating the amazing qualities of the microwave as simple as understanding the timing, according to Madam Benoit.

For instance, it takes more than an hour to cook meatloaf in a conventional oven and 15 minutes in a microwave.

In a microwave a cake bakes in six to nine minutes and a pork chop takes about seven minutes. Even fancy French cuisine is easily prepared.

"I haven't the patience to use an electric or gas oven any more," said Benoit.

The flavor, texture, color and vitamin content of a microwave dish is improved tremendously because of the very short cooking period, she said.

Ireland said a recent B.C. Hydro study shows it costs $26 a year to operate an electric or gas stove compared to $6 annually for a microwave.

He said microwave ovens now cost between $400 and $1,000, with the average price at $700, about the same price of a conventional stove.

"And their are no installation costs."

The microwave has been on the market since the early 1950's and Panasonic has been marketing them since 1962.

Marketing studies show one out of five Canadian homes contain a microwave, except in B.C. where the figure is one out of 10, according to Ireland.

The company's present aim is to educate the public about the mircrowave and hope once people find out how easy and safe it is to use they'll go out and buy one, he said.

"In the future it will be a fact of life," said Madam Benoit.

(Individuals wishing to obtain a copy of B.C. Hydro's 28-page booklet The Realities of Microwave Cooking may do so by picking one up in person at Hydro offices, 4400 West Saanich Road.)

Starling pie as a meal is startling

By JEANNE LESEM
UPI Family Editor

Barbara Walker has changed not only the old nursery rhyme but the size of the pie.

She uses only 12 birds "because that's the way Ma Ingalls made it in 'Little Town on the Prairie,'" Mrs. Walker said in an interview.

The blackbird — uh, starling — pie came near the end of her recipe testing for Little House Cookbook, a delightful new story book with recipes for children of all ages. It is based on the classic frontier stories Laura Ingalls Wilder wrote about her family. The Wilder series also inspired the NBC-TV series, The Little House on the Prairie.

Mrs. Walker said she actually baked starling pie and served it to her husband, Edward, and daughter, Anna, then 15.

"You should have seen their faces," she said. "The birds were impenetrable. I had cooked the pie two hours but it wasn't enough.

"I had to whomp up something else for supper. I think we had an omelet."

How does a suburbanite in a community of bird-watchers and conservationists get wild birds for a pie — legally?

Mrs. Walker said she asked a conservation officer in the Hudson Valley town of Ossining, N.Y. where she lives. She said she'd take starlings if blackbirds were not possible. Both species prey on farm crops and are sometimes hunted by farmers on their own property.

"I'd all but given up," she said. "Then, one Saturday the officer showed up at the door with a bag full of plucked, frozen starlings, a good two dozen."

As determined as Ma Ingalls not to waste good food, Mrs. Walker turned the tough little birds into a fresh crust, baked the pie two hours more and invited two staff members from a nearby nature center to share it at lunch the following day.

"It was delicious," she said, comparing the starlings' flavor to that of wild duck. There were little nuggets of meat on the breast of each tiny bird.

"It is one of the very few recipes that was not tested by someone else," Mrs. Walker added. Members of Los Gatos, Calif. 4-H Clubs cooked many of them during a year the Walkers spent in that area.

Mrs. Walker is director of news and publications for Marymount College and a self-styled frugal cook.

"Everything in the book I cooked for a family meal," she added.

"Vinegar pie is just about our favorite. I love salt-rising bread and I continuously make sour dough and my own crust mixes."

Mrs. Walker said she values her months of research into 19th century customs for the historical perspective they provided.

The filling

"You learn what went on before the Pure Food and Drug Act was passed.

"I was interested to learn why people prefer white flour. It stored better than whole grains (which turned rancid).

"These people (in the Wilder books) were desperately poor. Things baked with white flour were a treat. They were light, and gentle on broken teeth.

"I am also thrilled to have white flour that I can store on the shelf. Writing the book made me appreciate such amenities."

Among the other old-time recipes she converted to modern cooking methods are stewed jack rabbit and dumplings, pancake men, stewed pumpkin, apple-core vinegar, cottage cheese balls and popcorn and milk.

"Don't let your fear for the fate of the jack rabbit keep you from enjoying this fine meal if you have the chance," Mrs. Walker wrote in the introduction to the rabbit recipe. "This long-legged, long-eared fellow and his cousin the cottontail are among America's most durable citizens ... they flourish to the extent that many states permit year-round hunting. As plant-eaters they are a pest to farmers."

Each of Mrs. Walker's recipes is preceded by a passage from a Wilder book in which the particular food is mentioned or described.

She said her interest in pioneer life began when she read the Little House books aloud to her daughter, then five.

Later, she and a cousin and their three small children made a pilgrimage to places the Ingallses and Wilders had lived. She wrote a newspaper travel article about it that was published about eight years ago.

Onions, garlic in blood-thinning role

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

Garlic and onions have been used for hundreds of years as valuable agents in the treatment of a variety of conditions. To both have been ascribed practical, and even mythical, attributes.

Recently, Dr. Amar N. Makheja and his co-worker, Dr. Jack Y. Vanderhoek, of the George Washington University in Washington, D.C., have found that both garlic and onions do, indeed, have within them a compound that may be valuable in preventing strokes and even heart attacks.

It seems that this compound may play a role in preventing the clotting of blood. It is thought that it may resemble in action the benefits that are at present described as an anti-clotting device.

This may be reason to compensate for the "asocial" attributes of onions and garlic.

Another welcome addition to the techniques for the early recognition of cancer of the breast seems to be on the horizon. It is particularly welcome at this time when there is still so much discussion about benefits and the risks involved in mammography.

The procedure uses ultrasound vibrations as a scanning method for the detection of cysts and growths in the breasts of women of all ages.

Dr. Albert J. Gilson, the director of Nuclear Medicine Division of the Mt. Sinai Medical Center in Miami Beach, Fla., has been using this ultrasound scanning technique and comparing its value with the routine methods already in use.

The initial results are extremely favorable. In the light of these preliminary findings, it is hoped that more refined ultrasound instruments will soon be devised to increase their diagonistic potential.

Incidentally, it should be added that women are evaluated individually and should follow the instructions of their doctors when the present-day mammography is recommended. There seems to be far too much unnecessary fear about the use of X-ray mammography because of the distortion of facts about its safety and risks

A new synthetic hormone has recently been used to stop bleeding from stomach ulcers. The substance is known as "glypressin" and has been used by Dr. Joseph H. Cort of New York City. At a medical conference, Dr. Cort told the seminar that glypressin has proven successful in 88 percent of the cases in which it has been tried.

Bacon chowder for a bowl or a mug

Chow for chills

October's chilly days call for big bowls of warm chowder. Few people can resist this satisfying soup.

Actually the term chowder covers many soups. Some are thick like a stew, some are a thin broth full of chopped ingredients. I always think of chowder as a thick, hearty soup that can be served as a one-bowl meal when appropriate.

The best known chowders are based on fish or seafoods with salt pork, vegetables and often milk added. Meat and vegetable varieties can also be concocted. Corn chowder is probably the most popular of the vegetable chowders.

Chowder was introduced to North America by early French settlers. The word originates from the "chaudiere", the name for a large French kettle.

FISH CHOWDER
Makes 8 servings

- 2½ pounds boned fish, flounder, haddock cod
- Water
- 6 medium potatoes, cut into cubes
- 2 inch cube salt pork
- 3 medium onions, chopped
- 2 quarts whole milk
- Salt and pepper

Cook fish in 2 cups water for 15 minutes. Cook potatoes in boiling salted water for 15 minutes. Chop salt pork into small pieces; fry until crisp but not too brown. Add onion; cook 5 minutes more but do not brown. Add potato, pork, pork fat, onions and milk to fish. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Heat slowly to simmering point but do not boil.

CLAM CHOWDER MANHATTAN STYLE
Makes about 10 cuts

- 4 slices side bacon, cut in small pieces
- 1 large onion, sliced
- ½ cup chopped green pepper
- ½ cup chopped celery
- ½ cup chopped turnip
- 3 cup diced raw potato
- 3 cups water
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1 pint clams with their liquid
- ¼ teaspoon thyme
- 1 can (28-ounce) tomatoes
- Salt and pepper

Cook bacon in large saucepan or kettle until cooked but not too crisp. Pour off all but 1 tablespoon of drippings. Add onion, green pepper and celery. Saute until onion is transparent but not brown. Add turnip, potato, water and salt. Chop hard part of clams and add to soup with clam liquid; chop soft part of clams and reserve. Simmer, covered, over low heat for 30 minutes. Add reserved clams, thyme and tomatoes. Simmer 10 minutes. Season to taste with salt and pepper.

CORN CHOWDER
Makes about 8 cups

- ½ pound salt pork, diced
- 2 medium onions, chopped
- ½ cup chopped celery and tops
- ½ bay leaf, crumbled
- 2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
- 4 cups water
- 3 cups diced raw potato
- 1 can (14-ounce) cream-style corn
- 1 can (14-ounce) evaporated 2% milk
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ⅛ teaspoon pepper
- Paprika

Cook salt pork in large kettle until browned and crisp. Remove pork and pour off all but 2 tablespoons drippings. Add onions, celery and bay leaf; cook 5 minutes. Blend in flour. Add water and potato; bring to boil; simmer, covered, 15 minutes. Add corn and milk; heat just to the boiling point. Season with salt and pepper. Add pork. Serve sprinkled with paprika.

Rice pudding choice

CREAMY RICE PUDDING

- 3 cups cooked rice
- 3 cups milk
- ½ cup sugar
- 3 tablespoons butter or margarine
- 1 teaspoon vanilla.

Combine rice, milk, sugar, and butter. Cook over medium heat until thickened, about 30 minutes, stirring often. Add vanilla. Pour into serving dish. Serve hot or cold. Makes 6 servings.

Bananas are the basis of a bunch of goodies

Go bananas for good

hilda beastall

A convenience food that is packed with vitamins, minerals and flavor, yet is easy to handle and comes sealed in its own protective cover—this is the banana.

Most people like bananas though some avoid them believing them to cause overweight. This is true if bananas are eaten to excess, or together with other foods which are essentially weight producers, as ice cream, synthetic toppings and similar items.

A banana, like an avocado, enjoyed as a quick meal with something simple to go with it, provides lasting energy. The carbohydrates in bananas are natural sugars easily digested and yet remain available for a couple of hours.

The best flavored and most easily digested are fully ripe fruits with dark skins but not soft and pulpy. The inside when skinned is found to be firm and good, but truly ripe.

Make use of ripe banana on granola or with wholewheat bread or muffins at breakfast. For lunch at home use with a little cheese, green lettuce or freshly picked chickweed, and wholewheat bread or bun.

Children can be given ripe but firm banana in sandwiches, also a thin sliver of cheese. Homemade wholewheat buns cut into four slices are very good this way. A youngster eating at school may not know quite how to handle a fully ripe banana with a dark brown skin. So make the sandwiches fresh in the morning.

For a family, make up the separate servings just before the meal so they will be ready yet fresh.

Since homemade yogurt is being substituted for the oversweetened ice cream of today, I call this dessert Banana Yogurt Sundae.

BANANA YOGURT SUNDAE

For each serving:
1 ripe banana
¼ cup homemade low-fat yogurt
1 tsp fresh or frozen orange juice (optional) few grains ginger
finely ground sunflower seeds

Peel banana; slice in two lengthwise and lay halves side by side on plate to fit.

Make two mounds of yogurt on each plate; sprinkle with touch of ginger and a scattering of ground (or whole) sunflower seeds.

Next is an up-to-date metric recipe for Banana Bread, easy to make with your metric cup and measuring spoons. You will have found there is no need for converting. Just read metric and use metric.

The bread has a touch of sweetness, cuts into thick or thin slices easily like a fine grained cake, yet has a slightly rough texture with the wholewheat flour, wheat germ and ground peanuts.

BANANA BREAD

50 mL soft margarine
2 small eggs
125 mL water
3 small OR 2 medium ripe bananas
60 mL skim milk powder
250 mL wholewheat flour
250 mL unbleached flour with 25 mL wheat germ included
25 mL brown sugar
10 mL baking powder
1 mL baking soda
1 mL salt
125 mL finally ground raw peanuts

Cream margarine in small bowl, add eggs and beat. Add mashed bananas and water. Mix.

Measure all dry ingredients into large mixing bowl. Stir well to mix.

Add liquid to dry ingredients and stir with large spoon using a beating motion until well blended. Mixture should still be lumpy.

Spoon into well greased and lightly floured 9x5x3-inch loaf pan. This is 22x12x7 cm metric.

Bake in moderate oven 177 deg.C for about 45 minutes or until a clean knife comes out clean. Lower heat a little if time is longer in your oven. Don't allow top to scorch but the bread must be cooked or it will be unpleasantly moist to eat.

Remove from pan to wire rack to cool and become a little crisp on outside.

The bread remains slightly moist with the bananas but will not keep wrapped, because of the moistness. Enjoy it all while fresh during the first two or three days. Its nutrition is high. It goes well with cheese of various kinds; and with several plain fruit desserts, especially those of tropical origin, such as pineapple.

Personally I don't find the flavor of banana blends well with northern fruits such as apples.

For greatest value from this naturally packaged instant food, eat it uncooked. Here you have a quick but lasting energy food, for a ripe banana is satisfying to hunger as well as being an energy booster. With a surplus, make Banana Pie, Banana Bread and such delicacies.

An Irish Stew

1 rack of lamb, with chine bone removed, about 1¼ pounds (boned weight)
2 or 3 large onions, about 1¼ pounds.

5 medium to large potatoes, about 2 pounds.

Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste.

1. Cut away almost all the fat from the top of the ribs and pull away the thin layer of meat and fat on top of each rack. This layer is connected by a thin membrane. Cut away all the meat from the tops of the spare ribs, leaving the loin meat intact.

2. Cut between the ribs, separating the ribs into chops. Set aside.

3. Cut each onion into six segments of more or less equal size. Set aside.

4. Peel the potatoes and drop them into cold water to prevent discoloration. Cut three of the potatoes crosswise in half. Cut the remaining two potatoes into quarters.

5. Put the chops in a casserole. Run the lamb under cold water until water runs clear. Drain well. Arrange chops over bottom of casserole; add 5 1/2 cups cold water, boil.

6. At the moment the liquid comes to the boil, strain the cooking liquid.

7. Run the chops under cold water to chill well. Drain.

8. Return the chops to a clean casserole or kettle. Cover with the onion wedges.

9. Drain the potato halves and the quartered potatoes. Arrange the halved potatoes around the sides of the casserole over the chops.

10. Skim off all the scum and fat from the reserved liquid. Add the liquid to the chops in the casserole.

11. Cover the contents of the casserole with several layers of wax paper and bring to the boil. The paper must touch the top of the stew. Cook about 30 minutes.

12. Meanwhile, cook quartered potatoes and add potato liquid to the stew. Mash potatoes and stir into stew. Cook gently for 10 minutes.

Build a bean cone

By BARBARA HANSEN
Los Angeles Times

ENSENADA, Mexico — Everyone knows about ice cream cones. But what about bean cones?

They not only exist, they're a popular snack in Ensenada. One place that serves them is Tacos Fiesta, a little cafe on Avenida Ruiz diagonally across the street from Hussong's Cantina.

You can see the cones, which are made of crisp, fried tortillas, heaped in the window ready to be filled with beans.

Two pretty, young counter girls, Isabel Gonzales and Florinda Soto, explained how they are made and served.

First, corn tortillas are shaped into cones and deep fried. This is done with a specially made mold. Each tortilla is folded around a metal cone, which nests inside another cone, holding the tortilla securely in place. The mold holds eight cones, and when all are ready, it is lowered into deep, hot fat and the tortillas are fried until crisp.

Additional tortillas are cut in half and deep fried. When a cone is ordered, the girls stuff it with beans. Then they break the tortilla halves in two and place three of these tortillas in the top. They serve as the dippers with which you eat the beans instead of a spoon or fork. Lastly, shredded Jack cheese is heaped on top.

To make the beans, pinto beans are boiled with salt as the only seasoning. When tender, they are ground and fried in oil in which some onion has been cooked until browned.

On the restaurant counter are several bowls of salsa, which can be added to the bean cones as desired. They include a cilantro mixture and green and red salsas as well as radishes and hot pickled carrots.

The bean cones can be made at home but won't be as perfect without a mold to hold them in shape. Instead of a mold, you hold them with tongs and insert a wooden spoon handle to keep the cones open as they fry.

ENSENADA-STYLE
1 cup dried pinto beans
Salt
Oil
14 corn tortillas
1-2 small onion, chopped
Shredded Jack cheese
Bottled or homemade salsas

Cook beans in water to cover until tender, 2 to 4 hours, adding salt to taste halfway through cooking time.

Meanwhile, make cones. Heat oil for deep frying in saucepan. There should be enough oil to cover a cone completely when placed on its side. Soften 8 tortillas in microwave oven or wrap in foil and heat at 350 degrees until pliable.

Fold each tortilla into a cone. Hold together with tongs. Place in hot oil and immediately place handle of wooden spoon inside cone to hold open. Fry until crisp. Drain on paper towels. Cut remaining tortillas in half and fry until crisp. Drain on paper towels and set aside.

When beans are tender, grind them with some of their liquid in blender or food processor. Heat 1-3 cup oil in large skillet. Add onion and cook until browned. Add beans and fry until as thick as desired.

To serve, fill a tortilla cone almost totop with beans. Break each tortilla half in two or in thirds. Place 3 of these chips in top of bean cone and add generous handful of cheese. Serve salsas on the side to add as desired. Makes 8 servings.

questions & answers

Q. I have before me a recipe for salmon to be poached in champagne. I wonder why the champagne luxury is necessary. When the bubbles disappear don't you wind up with a still white wine? Would you use a $20 bottle of champagne to make this dish?

A. I agree with you that once the bubbles disappear you do wind up with a still white wine. And I know I would not use a $20 bottle of champagne to make the dish.

It is a thought that has been explored before, but I daresay that in a vast majority of restaurants, when the menu specifies champagne sauce, the chef actually uses a very good still white wine and not champagne to make the dish. That, of course, is ethically wrong, but most menu writers have a notoriously romantic streak.

Q. When I grew up in an Italian household, my mother always spoke of her tomato gravy. You invariably write about tomato sauces. Is there a difference between a sauce and a gravy?

A. Basically a sauce and a gravy are the same thing. A sauce is, to my ears, simply a more sophisticated and better sounding word than gravy.

To stretch a very fine point, it seems to me that a gravy would probably contain flour as a thickener and would not be as refined as a sauce. But that is nit-picking. And I am certain that your mother's tomato gravy does not contain any kind of starch as a thickener.

Q. When foods are to be marinated for any period of time, they are rarely covered with the marinade. Is it necessary to turn the foods as they stand or does it matter?

A. Quite obviously the flavors of the marinade will be better distributed through the foods if they are turned on occasion as they stand.

Incidentally, at about the time this question was asked, a note came from Sidney Lauren of Cleveland, Ohio, who wrote that he was "frustrated while preparing chicken in a marinade to note that only a small portion of the pieces were immersed in the liquid."

"I transferred the liquid and the pieces to a heavy gauge plastic bag," he wrote, "twisted the bag down to the volume of contained material (while excluding the air) and fastened the bag with the usual tie."

By doing this, he noted, all the parts were equally coated by the marinade.

Cooked ham can be one instance where glaze is kept on all over

craig claiborne

During my college days I was told once that French is the most concise language on earth. "The French," my professor said, "use a minimum of verbal space to express an idea."

This thought came back full force recently when someone asked if I would tell them precisely what the word "deglaze" implies when used in a recipe. It is, of course, a direct translation from the French word deglacer.

When foods are browned in butter or other fat, I explained, a "glaze" forms in the skillet or other cooking utensil. This glaze is caused by the liquids that emanate from the meat, poultry or fish that is being cooked. The glaze obviously has a desirable flavor provided it isn't burned. Thus, when the fat in which the food was browned is poured off, wine or broth is added to the skillet to loosen the glaze and cause it to melt to provide a basic sauce for the dish. Often, of course, wine is used to deglaze and then a broth or cream is added to make the sauce even more palatable.

Now consider the wordy, awkward English equivalent to explain this same action. If you do not borrow the French term, a recipe writer must spell out the procedure as follows:

"Add wine or broth to the skillet and, using a whisk or wooden spoon, stir to dissolve the brown particles that cling to the bottom and sides of the pan."

A few of the readers of this column are, it would seem, amateur chemists.

When mention was made recently of the uses and availability of rose water, it was stated that rose water is a nonalcoholic flavoring widely used in Eastern and Middle Eastern cuisines and could be purchased in markets that specialize in fine imported foods.

Several readers wrote to explain how to make rose water at home.

Andree Abramoff of Andree's Mediterranean Cooking School in Manhattan wrote to say, "There is indeed no substitute for this pure, unadulterated distilled essence, which is simply the condensation of distilled rose petals (or orange blossom petals for orange flower water).

"My grandmother used to make both these essences in Egypt each spring, usually about the time of Passover. The steaming pot she used was actually a kind of still which she called an alambic, using the French word for alembic. It resembled a clam steamer with a spiral spout on top. This was called a serpentin, also after the French.

"My grandmother would place the flower petals, which she purchased by the bushel, in the perforated container of the steamer and add water to the bottom part. The steam in the upper portion of the still would form droplets that would drip down into the spiral spigot under which she had placed her bottles.

"Her whole house smelled like a perfume factory when she did this, and she used her precious waters for everything from additions to desserts to a cure for baby colic."

Far-out meals soon become common fare

the 60-minute gourmet

We were reminiscing recently — for the thousandth time, of course — on the elaborate changes that have been made in North American taste and food habits within recent memory. My memory stretches back to that World's Fair in 1939 when I first came here to work in the restaurant of the fair's French pavilion.

Many of the dishes created in the pavilion kitchen were not overly daring, and yet they were at the time a novelty to the thousands of fair-goers and were consumed with obvious relish. Chicken in red wine sauce — particularly coq au vin — and boeuf bourguignon were among the dishes in which the public indulged with uncommon enthusiasm.

Both those dishes have become so familiar by now that they seem almost as American as they were French. In a way, it seems a shame that both dishes have lost some of their original eclat, for both dishes have an honest and inherent goodness. And one of them, chicken in red wine sauce, is a snap to make. the most basic such dish is a simple sauce with mushrooms, chopped shallots and red wine with herbs and spices. The cooking time for browning the chicken in butter is about 12 minutes. After that you simply add wine and seasonings, cover and cook until the chicken is done and the sauce is ready to be strained.

I have deliberately avoided calling coq au vin, for that dish in its classic incarnation is a bit more complicated and time-consuming, calling as it does for rendered pieces of salt pork (lardons), glazed small white onions and finally, croutons.

Thus, the recipe here is called au Brouilly. The day the dish was recently made I used a glass of Brouilly, and excellent beaujolais that happend to be handy. Any good dry red wine, preferably a burgundy, would suffice. The chicken and a hastily made gratin made with noodles and cheese are a fine combination. That plus a salad would suffice.

POULET SAUTE au Brouilly (Chicked in red wine sauce)

- 1 two-and-one-half-to-three-pound chicken, cut into serving pieces and including back, neck, gizzard and liver
- Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
- 2 tablespoons butter
- ¼ pound mushrooms, left whole if very small, otherwise halved, quartered or sliced
- ¼ cup chopped shallots
- 1 teaspoon finely chopped garlic
- 2 tablespoons flour
- 1½ cups dry red wine, preferably a Bouilly
- ½ cup plus 2 tablespoons chicken broth
- 1 bay leaf
- 1 sprig parsley
- 2 sprigs fresh thyme or less
- ¼ teaspoon dryed thyme

1. Sprinkle the chicken ieces with salt and pepper.
2. Heat the butter in a skillet large enough to hold the chicken parts in one layer without crowding. Add the chicken pieces skin side down.
3. Cook the chicken over moderately high heat until golden brown, about six or seven minutes. Turn the pieces and cook about five minutes longer.
4. Add the mushrooms, shallots and garlic and stir to blend. Cook about one minute and sprinkle the flour evenly over all.
5. Add the wine and half a cup of broth and bring to the boil.
6. Add the bay leaf, parsley sprig and thyme. Add salt and pepper to taste and cover. Cook 15 to 20 minutes.
7. Using a slotted spoon, transfer the meaty parts of the chicken to a heatproof casserole. Add the mushrooms, but leave the back, gizzard and so on in the skillet.
8. Strain the sauce over the chicken, pressing with the back of a wooden spoon to extract juices from the solids. Add the remaining two tablespoons of broth and swirl it around to thin the sauce remaining in the skillet. Strain this over the chicken. Reheat thoroughly.

Yield: 4 servings.

NOODLES WITH CHEESE

- ¾ pound medium or fine egg noodles
- Salt
- 2 tablespoons butter
- Freshly ground pepper to taste
- ⅛ teaspoon grated nutmeg
- 1 cup heavy cream
- ¼ pound grated gruyers or Swiss chees, about one and one-quarter cupps loosely packed.

1. Preheat the broiler.
2. Cook the noodles in boiling salted water until tender. Drain. Return the noodles to the kettle and add half the butter, salt, pepper and nutmeg. Toss to blend.
3. Spoon the noodles into a hot serving dish. Heat the cream and pour it over the noodles.
4. Sprinkle the cheese over the noodles and dot with the remaining butter. Run under the broiler until cheese melts. Yield: 4 servings.

A steak bathed in limelight

By MIKE McGRADY

Whenever a fine chef makes steak Diane, he turns it into a major production number. Most often he will cook it on a chafing dish right beside your table. There are the sizzling sounds of the steak, the pungent aromas of the special sauce, and then the chef produces a bottle of cognac, splashes the cognac into the frying pan, touches it with a match and ... it's showtime!

Okay, here's your chance to break into show business. But don't rush it. Just as the better Broadway show needs its out-of-town tryout, you'll want to run through this dinner a few times before trying it out for guests. Test your act on the less critical members of the immediate family. A misfired steak Diane will leave the match sputtering unromantically in a damp bog of sauce amd spice. Or worse, you may go down in flames, creating the kind of explosion more suitable to the White Sands Proving Ground than to the dining room table.

The Staples: Make sure these are all on hand: butter, salt, pepper, garlic, basil, Worcestershire sauce, Dijon mustard, sherry, cognac.

The Shopping List: Two pounds of steak, sliced thin and pounded flat (tell the butcher it's for steak Diane); shallots (or chives, or scallions); parsley; two pounds of fresh green beans; lemon; an onion; two pounds of Idaho potatoes; fresh cherries.

We're keeping the side dishes as a simple as possible tonight so that there will be nothing to distract you at the magic moment of ignition. It is possible to make steak Diane without the flaming finale, of course, just as it's possible to celebrate the Fourth of July without fireworks.

5:15 p.m.: Preheat the oven to 350 degrees. While the oven is getting hot, carefully wash the potatoes. (Caution! No soap.) When potatoes are clean and still wet, salt them heavily. Some like to coat the skins with melted butter before adding the salt, but that is just gilding the lily.

5:15 p.m.: Put the potatoes on an open rack in the preheated oven. It should take about an hour to bake them. Rinse the string beans and cut off their tips. Put half-a-stick of butter in a large saucepan over medium heat. Add two cloves of garlic, minced. Saute the garlic for five minutes with one medium chopped onion. Add the green beans, salt, pepper and a pinch of basil. Cook over a medium-low heat until beans are tender, then turn heat to low.

6 p.m.: There will come a time when you will be able to make the sauce for the steak Diane at the same time as the steak. Not tonight. Tonight we'll make the sauce in advance and add it at the last minute. In a small saucepan over medium-low heat, melt half a stick of butter. Add a handful of chopped shallots (or chives, or scallions) and a few sprigs of parsley, chopped. Now a dash of salt and pepper, a couple of splashes of Worcestershire sauce, a small spoonful of Dijon mustard. Keep this warm. Test the green beans for tenderness; squeeze half a lemon over them.

6:25 p.m.: This is it, the big moment. Break a leg, as they in show biz. The steaks must be thin and free of fat. Heat a heavy frying pan over medium-high heat; add a dab of butter and a steak. Each steak should be cooked for a minute or two on each side over high heat. (Caution! Add more butter if steaks start to stick.) Then place the steaks in a warm oven.

Put an ounce or so of cognac in a small saucepan over medium heat for a minute or so. Don't let it get too hot. Then pour it into the pan you used to fry the steaks. Match! Flames! Applause! Then, as the flames die out, add a healthy shot of sherry and scrape together the steak residues. Mix in the sauce you made earlier.

Test the baking potatoes with a fork. When the fork passes easily through the potatoes, they're ready.

Gently spoon the sauce over each steak and allow some to drip onto the potatoes. If all this has worked perfectly, there may be a curtain call or two. But if it hasn't, you simply follow the oldest culinary tradition of them all: The dinner must go on.

Music series to focus on Leclair

Under the title, Leclair and his Contemporaries, Victoria Conservatory of Music will present the first in this season's Early Music Series of concerts Friday.

The program will consist of mid-18th century French music, concentrating on the works of Jean-Marie Leclair (1697-1764), the most significant and original composer in France between Couperin and Rameau.

Included will be a solo violin sonata and two late works, an overture and a trio sonata. A flute sonata by a rival of Leclair will also be heard.

The composer, G.P. Guignon, was head of the 18th century Paris musicians' union, La Confrerie St.Julien. This is the title which has been adopted by the Conservatory ensemble.

Members are Sydney Humphreys, James Hunter, Kelly Charlton and James Kennedy. Soloist in Nicolas Bernier's humorous cantata, Le Cafe, will be soprano Mary Copland.

Concert time is 8 p.m. at Craigdarroch Castle. There is a small admission charge.

Disney's world now being challenged

scott's world
by vernon scott

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Walt Disney Productions, alone among animation film studios, has succeeded in producing feature length cartoon hits regularly since Snow White burst upon the scene in 1937.

Every five years or so during the past four decades Disney has reaped uncounted millions from the likes of Pinocchio, Peter Pan and Jungle Book virtually without competition.

Other animation studios have challenged Disney in the field, among them Hanna-Barbera (Charlotte's Web) with indifferent success.

Now Disney faces a formidable competitor in Don Bluth Productions which is making a $7 million version of the award-winning novel Mrs. Frisby And The Rats of NIMH.

The new animated feature, in conjunction with Aurora Productions, will be produced by a team of former Disney employees who defected en masse last month.

Bluth and 11 other animators and artists pulled out of Disney for the express purpose of making animated films and have hitched their wagon to Aurora which is headed by three former Disney executives.

The defection could be a major blow to Disney. The departed artists represented 17 per cent of Disney's animation department which was putting the finishing touches to The Fox And The Hound due for release at Christmas, 1980. The movie has been pushed back six months.

Nucleus of the new outfit are Bluth, Gary Goldman and John Pomeroy, key animators at Disney for the past seven years or so.

Bluth worked on Sleeping Beauty in 1971 and subsequently contributed to The Rescuers, Robin Hood and The Sword and the Stone.

In leading the exodus from Disney, Bluth said, "The studio just hasn't been the same since Walt died.

"It's the difference of night and day. There's no decisive vision or leadership in the animation department. It was Walt's baby. All of us want to keep the animation art form alive and we had a difficult time doing it at Disney.

"The creative atmosphere has disappeared. Their thinking is more toward marketing than production. More business than art."

Bluth said Mrs. Frisby And The Rats of NIMH will be in the Disney tradition. The design and art work will reflect Disney's classic style.

"The important thing is to give the animated characters personality," he said. "And that's what we're working on right now."

Jim Stewart, executive vice president of Aurora, which is providing the capital for Mrs. Frisby, directly employs nine of the former Disney animators through a subsidiary.

Stewart, a Disney veteran of 12 years and a former vice president, joined forces last year with two other ex-Disney executives — Richard Irvine and Jon Lang — to form Aurora.

He resents implications that Aurora "raided" Disney to set up a competitive animation studio.

"Aurora was established to make live action feature films," Stewart said. "We are just finishing our first movie, Why Would I Lie, which Larry Peerce is directing. We had a goal of some day making animated films.

"We did not initiate the decision for the animators to leave Disney. They let it be known to their superiors they were unhappy and were actively seeking another association.

"The creative atmosphere in Disney's animation department changed in the past few years. The animators didn't have any incentives. They resented the lack of appreciation for the contributions they were making.

"They came to us and said they were interested in what we were doing because of our past association and interest in animation."

Opening lead — two of diamonds.

Bridge is not the kind of game where a defender can play first, think later, and expect to fare well. If he does, he will sometimes have to pay for his failure to think things through.

Consider the present case where West led a diamond against six hearts. East took dummy's queen with the ace and returned a club. South now had many different ways to play the hand, but he found the winning way.

He took the club return with the ace, drew trumps, then cashed the A-K of spades and ruffed a spade. Dummy's king of diamonds then served as an entry to cash the remaining spades, and declarer easily made the slame to score 1,730 points.

Offhand, it might seem that East-West were helpless in the matter. However, this was not really the case. Had the defense functioned correctly, South would have lost the slam.

East was the player at fault. He should not have taken his ace of diamonds at trick one. Instead, he should have played his three of diamonds on dummy's queen. Had he done that, declarer's goose would have been cooked. No matter what South did, the contract would have failed. By ducking the queen of diamonds, East would have deprived declarer of a vital entry to dummy later on to utilize the spades.

Moreover, East could tell at trick one — from examining dummy's hand and his own — that ducking the queen of diamonds offered a far better chance to stop the slam than winning the queen with the ace. The one thing East could not afford was to win the opening lead with the ace and then start to think of what to do next.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological forecast for Thursday, October 18, 1979
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (Mar. 21-Apr. 19): New approach necessary — the tried-and-true falls short of mark. Know it, imprint style, pioneer a procedure. Leo, Aquarius persons figure in scenario. Delays, apparent setbacks are temporary — you are "building a case."

TAURUS (Apr. 20-May 20): Study Aries message — maintain steady, moderate pace. Check information provided by dependent, co-worker, one who shares your interests. Your position is strengthened as result of "hidden allies." Emphasis on teaching, learning, making contacts which aid in creating secure base.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Good Moon aspect coincides now with increased activity, experimentation, special reports, settling differences with relatives. Another Gemini, a Virgo and a Sagittarian figure prominently. Swift changes, involving emotional patterns, work in your favor.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Stick to familiar ground. Be frank and factual. Get to heart of matters, be finished with superficial material. Someone is telling you what you want to hear. Key is to heed counsel of one who provides straight-from-shoulder information.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Powers of analysis surge to forefront. You decipher clues and come up with complete story. You will be active, busy — telephones ring, mail contains special announcements, visitors, news of relatives. Member of opposite sex is very much in picture.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept.22): Accent on acquisitions, home decorating, purchase of luxury items, sales of art objects. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio natives figure prominently. Be diplomatic, not weak. Lessons are driven home in connection with basic costs, required budgets.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct.22): Cycle high — circumstances turn in your favor. Know it, be direct, confident and act in independent manner. Pisces, Virgo and the number 7 figure prominently. You succeed in defining terms, improving services and techniques.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov.21): Secrets are exchanged. Pressures exist. Tests, challenges grab spotlight. Capricorn, Cancer individuals play key roles. Get view of one who currently may lack general approval. You are due to make valuable "underground" discovery.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Emphasis on wishes, romance, personal desires, results of business investments. Finish what you start, be "in touch" with the media. Aries, Libra natives figure in scenario. You can get finger on pulse of public.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Promotion, outlet for creative energies, chance for romance — these are emphasized. Leo, Aquarius natives play featured roles. Cycle is such that you gain support of those in positions of authority. Be direct, confident, accent original approach to assignment.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Lunar aspect highlights special publication, communication, pursuit of educational project. Intuition flashes on target — follow through on hunch. Another Aquarian shares experience, imparts wisdom. Long-awaited decision comes into focus. It is good news!

PISCES (Feb. 19-Mar. 20): Obtain hint from Aquarius message. Money question is answered. You could have reason to celebrate. Expand horizons, perceive potential. Check traffic conditions. Be aware of directions, interest rates, fiscal trends.

"You've been scribbling and cussing," said Martin. "What's the problem?"

"It's a girl I met at the party, Dad. A real knockout," Stan replied. "She wouldn't give her phone number. Only that its 3-digit part is 447 more than the last three digits of its second part, but 447 less than the first three. It's driving me crazy."

Martin chuckled. "Sounds like she's a math whiz, hardly your type. Let me have a go."

Well?

Banker reappears, guarded by police

NEW YORK (UPI) — Italian financier Michele Sindona, the key figure in the largest bank collapse in U.S. history, is sedated and under police guard in a hospital today but his whereabouts for the last two months remain a mystery.

He was last seen Aug. 2, walking down a street near his apartment in the fashionable Pierre Hotel. Tuesday he reappeared as mysteriously as he had disappeared — and with what authorities said may be a bullet wound in the leg.

Officials do not know whether the 59-year-old banker was kidnapped by urban guerrillas as his family had claimed or if he had fled to avoid trial for fraud in the failure of the Franklin National Bank.

They hope to question him today in his bed at Doctor's Hospital in Manhattan. His condition was described as stable.

The banker's family, in a statement issued by Sindona's lawyers, said he had been released by his kidnappers. But the FBI would only say Sindona was under the protection of federal marshals.

The family's statement said Sindona was released "by his kidnappers at about 11:10 a.m." in a seamy neighborhood on 42nd Street.

"He was picked up by his son-in-law and after examination by a doctor was admitted to Doctor's Hospital where he is being treated for a wound in the leg and exhaustion," it said.

A city detective who spoke to Sindona briefly before he was sedated said the banker "looked thin and like he had been through an ordeal."

Sindona, 59, who once served as financial adviser to Pope Paul VI, had been free on $3 million bail awaiting trial on charges of misappropriating $45 million in funds of the Franklin National Bank. The bank subsequently collapsed in the biggest bank failure in U.S. history.

His trial had been scheduled to begin Sept. 10.

Authorities said that while Sindona's family and lawyers received letters, including one that stated he was being held to face "proletarian justice," no ransom demand ever was made.

Sindona was not charged with any crime connected to his disappearance but U.S. District Court Judge Thomas Griesa ordered he be guarded by federal marshals pending determination of his ability to stand trial in U.S. District Court in Manhattan.

First known death after polio vaccine

ATLANTA (Reuter) — The National Centre for Disease Control has documented what is believed to be the first polio death of a person who was fully immunized against the disease by an oral vaccine.

"Of the millions and millions of doses of oral vaccine given millions of children, this is the first case we know of where someone fully immunized has died from polio," said Dr. Melinda Moore, who works at the centre.

She said that in 1978 an 11-year-old Ohio boy developed cold-like symptoms, suffered sudden respiratory arrest and subsequently died of brain damage. The precise nature of his illness was not immediately determined.

An investigation by the Ohio state health department concluded that the boy died of polio.

Thieves fleece makeup queen

NEW YORK (UPI) — Three bandits forced their way into the upper East Side mansion of Estee Lauder and robbed the founder of the cosmetics company of up to $1 million in jewelry and several thousand dollars in cash, police said today.

Police said a man posing as a chauffeur went to a side door of the three-storey mansion on Manhattan's fashionable East Side late Tuesday afternoon and said he was there to pick up Lauder.

When Lauder's own chauffeur, John Drummond, opened the door to discuss the matter, the man pulled out a gun and, with two companions, forced his way into the home, police said.

Police said the three men then tied the hands and taped the eyes of Lauder, Drummond, two maids and another man who was not immediately identified.

The three searched the house and fled with several thousand dollars in cash and jewelry that could be worth as much as $1 million, according to police.

Lauder is chairman of the $100-million cosmetics company that bears her name.

'Every nickel and every nut traced'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Special counsel Paul Curran said Tuesday he has found no evidence of criminal wrongdoing in his investigation into loans from Bert Lance's National Bank of Georgia to the Carter family peanut business.

Curran delivered a bulky report to Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti and said there is "no room for doubt" to his conclusion that no money was diverted from the Carter peanut warehouse to Jimmy Carter's 1976 presidential campaign.

"Every nickel and every peanut have been traced into and out of the warehouse," Curran said in a statement, "and no funds were unlawfully diverted in either direction."

He said there also was no evidence to support filing of criminal charges.

China pledges trade for tech

PARIS (Reuter) — Chinese Premier Hua Guofeng discussed world problems with President Valery Giscard d'Estaing on Tuesday after giving assurances that China would increase trade and co-operation with France.

"Our French friends may rest assured that the Chinese government will, as in the past, do its utmost to promote amicable co-operation between China and France in all fields," the Chinese leader said at a luncheon.

Giscard d'Estaing said at a banquet Monday that France was ready to offer advanced technology for China's economic and industrial modernization.

Hua, whose three-week tour of Western Europe to make friends and increase trade started Monday, told Premier Raymond Barre at the luncheon that relations with France ranked high among China's foreign policy priorities.

Hua also said Monday that he hopes France would play an increasing role in international affairs and that he supports a strong and united Europe as a bulwark against Soviet expansionism.

The Chinese leader also will visit West Germany, Britain and Italy.

Hua and Giscard d'Estaing on Tuesday unveiled a plaque in memory of the late Premier Chou Enlai at a house where he had lived shortly after the First World War.

Gold markets dip as U.S. tries new auction strategy

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — The Treasury, trying to throw speculators off balance, announced Tuesday that it no longer is committed to selling specified amounts of gold on a fixed schedule.

And the immediate reaction was a slump in gold prices on European markets. Gold fell by $11 in Zurich to open at $383.50 and by $8 in London, opening at the same rate.

Although the Treasury clearly hopes to lower the long-run price of gold, some experts said the strategy could backfire and raise the price. Analysts were wary of forecasting the market reaction, except to predict a period of confusion.

As the price of gold skyrocketed above $440 an ounce early this month, the Treasury received some advice to vary gold sales and that's what was decided. If the markets are kept guessing about new supplies of gold, speculation will be riskier than before and may be discouraged, the Treasury hopes.

Speculators will have to cope with the possibility that reduced sales may tighten gold supplies, which would raise prices, and the threat that the Treasury may suddenly dump a large amount of gold on the market, slashing prices.

James Sinclair, a gold specialist in New York, predicted that the Treasury's shift will "add confusion to a market that lacks predictability," and said that "when markets are off balance they tend to decline."

Beyond this short-run effect, the strategy may bring results contrary to what the Treasury wants, Sinclair said in a telephone interview. "It locks them in to sell at least as much gold as often as before," he said.

Any indication of a Treasury plan to halt or greatly reduce sales would raise gold prices in the market, and that would further "destabilize" the dollar and other currencies, Sinclair said.

Tass denies canoeist defection — he was 'seduced, abducted'

MOSCOW (UPI) — The Soviet Union intensified its campaign against a growing number of defections by publishing an interview today with an Olympic champion canoeist who said he was drugged and held against his will in West Germany.

The official Tass news agency reported Tuesday night that today's edition of the weekly newspaper Literaturnaya Gazeta carries an interview with Soviet defector Vladislavas Chessyunas, last seen in West Germany on Sept. 13.

In the interview, the 39-year-old sportsman said he was seduced, drugged and abducted by a West German woman named Ursula Forkert while he was attending the world canoeing championships in Duisburg, West Germany, last August.

"Chessyunas further related how, with some adventures, he was able to get to the Soviet Embassy in Bonn and, with the help of his Soviet comrades, to return to his homeland," the Tass report of the interview said.

The Soviet version directly contradicted Western press reports that said Chessyunas defected to West Germany last August but was knocked unconscious by Soviet secret agents on Sept. 13 and dragged back to the Soviet Union where he is hospitalized with head injuries.

The Soviet Union has stepped up its drive against defections since three leading Bolshoi ballet dancers defected to the United States and two former world and Olympic pairs champion ice skaters defected to West Germany last month.

Mammoth found in Washington

CONCRETE, Wash. (UPI) — The remains of an Ice Age woolly mammoth have been discovered by a high school science teacher and his three sons.

Although found in mid-August about five miles east of town, Bill Thompson said, the find was not reported until this week because he wanted to allow time for proper excavation at the site before attracting public attention.

Thompson's son, Shawn, 10, was first to spot evidence of the remains when he saw teeth protruding from the ground. Excavation with the help of a Western Washington University geologist uncovered a crescent shaped tusk about six feet long and parts of the animal's skull.

Roy LaPlant, principal of the high school, said students now are touring the site to get some first-hand education of prehistoric life.

It was estimated the mammoth stood about 14 feet tall and had migrated from Asia over the Bering Strait when it was linked to North America by solid ice.

Jumping Jupiter! New-found moon fastest in solar system

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pictures snapped by the Voyager 2 spacecraft have disclosed a new moon in orbit around the planet Jupiter. Travelling at more than 100,000 kilometres per hour, it's the fastest moving satellite in our solar system.

The moon, temporarily designated "1979-J-1," is the 14th known to be orbiting giant Jupiter. It is only 30 to 40 kilometres in diameter and is circling near the outer edge of the Jovian ring, about 58,000 kilometres above the planet's cloud tops.

The U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration said Tuesday the discovery was made by two researchers at California Institute of Technology, Dr. G. Edward Danielson and graduate student David Jewitt.

NASA said they noticed a star-like object in a picture transmitted by Voyager 2 as it passed near Jupiter last July 8. But after an extensive search they could find no stars in the vicinity.

This led to examination of another Voyager 2 photo of higher resolution "showing the same portion of the ring, the same curious object and trails of some known stars. Verification that the object was indeed a satellite of Jupiter was based on the differing angles and lengths of star trails and the trail left by the target object."

From the two pictures, an orbit was caleulated independently by Jewitt and Dr. Stephen Synott, an optical navigation engineer at NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena,

"1979-J-1" is the closest moon to Jupiter. It is smaller than seven of the planet's other moons, and larger than six of them. The satellite takes only seven hours and eight minutes to complete an orbital circuit," NASA reported. "This is the fastest moving satellite in the solar system and it has the shortest orbital period."

The newly-found moon adds to an impressive list of Jovian scientific observations made by Voyager 1 when it probed Jupiter last March and by Voyager 2 in July.

New Carter policy to restrain Cuba's military growth

New York Times

WASHINGTON — The Carter administration, whose policy toward Cuba has been based on efforts to normalize relations, has decided to switch to a concerted effort to discourage Cuba's military involvement abroad and to undercut its influence in the third world, officials said Tuesday.

They said the policy change, outlined in a directive recently signed by President Carter, also called for increased economic aid and sales of military equipment to countries in the Caribbean and in Central America to compete more effectively with Cuba for influence.

The directive was described as reflecting growing displeasure at high levels of the government over Cuba's military intervention in Africa and elsewhere and its military ties with the Soviet Union.

The officials said Carter had ordered the State Department to consult with the Defense Department, the Central Intelligence Agency and the Agency for International Development to devise strategies for curbing Cuba's activities and isolating it politically. But they stressed that the directive did not authorize any attempt to undermine the government of President Fidel Castro.

Officials said Carter's policy memorandum, known as Presidential Directive 52, had been drafted after his recent televised speech on the Cuban situation and was meant to respond to the broader problems posed by Soviet military support for Cuba and its assertive policies in the third world.

Commenting on the directive, officials expressed doubts whether the steps it called for would lead to any significant change in Cuban activities.

Talks roadblock 'nearly resolved'

Times News Services

LONDON — The Zimbabwe Rhodesian peace talks appeared ready to overcome the main constitutional roadblock today and move on to the hurdle of transitional arrangements for a new government in Zimbabwe Rhodesia.

"We are ready to resolve the land issue, but I cannot say anything else on this at the moment," Patriotic Front guerrilla leader Joshua Nkomo told reporters.

President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia predicted Nkomo and guerrilla co-leader Robert Mugabe would rejoin the six-week-old talks, provided the British government established a fund to buy out white farmers for black resettlement. All indications were that the British and the Americans were ready to do it.

The tortuous process took an unexpected twist today with the arrival of South African Foreign Minister Roelof F. (Pik) Botha for talks with his British counterpart.

Diplomatic observers said South Africa is concerned that Bishop Abel Muzorewa might make concessions at the London talks that would lead to a white exodus from Zimbabwe Rhodesia.

Britain had said it was useless to talk to the guerrillas after after they balked at the idea that a new black government compensate white landowners whose property is nationalized, and the guerrillas said Tuesday they would rejoin the talks once "the question of land and compensation is clarified."

Kaunda told reporters in the Zambian capital of Lusaka that Nkomo, whose guerrillas are based in Zambia, and Mugabe, whose fighters are in Mozambique, were prepared to continue the talks but the issue of land ownership in a post-independence Zimbabwe should be resolved first.

"We therefore ask publicly what we have so far done privately — that the British government create a fund for the purchase of land from those who own it now for those who have nothing.

Kaunda said several governments had offered to make contributions to the fund and were only waiting "for the British government to take the first step.

"The only real problem is the issue of who provides the money for compensation to settler farmers when their land is redistributed by a future Zimbabwean government.

The statement followed a private meeting Monday in Lusaka that President Kaunda called with American Ambassador Frank Wisner and British High Commissioner Sir Leonard Allinson.

The presidents of black Africa's five "frontline states" were to continue their meetings today in Tanzania in an attempt to help break the deadlocked London peace talks.

Previous estimates have been as high as $200 million for the fund to buy out the established Rhodesian farmers.

A report from Washington Tuesday indicated the U.S. was prepared to join Britain in financing the fund if the guerrillas returned to the peace talks, and that West European and other countries might participate.

Get a handle on something great.
